The songish part must abound in the softness and variety of numbers, its intention being to please the hearing. Dryden.

SONGSTER, n. f. [from song.] A singer. Used of human fingers, it is a word of slight contempt.

The pretty songsters of the spring, with their various notes, did seem to welcome him as he pass'd. Hobbes.

Some songsters can no more sing in any chamber but their own, than some clerks read in any book but their own. L'Estrange.

Either songster holding out their throats,

SONGSTRESS, n. f. [from song.] A female singer.

Through the soft silence of the listening night
The sober-suited songstress trills her lay. Thomson.

SONNET, n. f. [sonnet, French; sonnetto, Italian.]

1. A short poem consisting of fourteen lines, of which the rhymes are adjusted by a particular rule. It is not very suitable to the English language; and has not been used by any man of eminence since Milton, of whose sonnets this is a specimen.

A book was writ of late call'd Tetrachordon,
And woven close, both matter, form, and stile;
The subject new; it walk'd the town a-whole,
Numb'ring good intellects, now seldom you'd on;
Cries the stall reader, Bless us, what a word on A title-page is that! and some in file
Stand spelling false, while one might walk to Mile-End-green. Why is it harder, first, than Gordon, Colkitts, or Macdonnell, or Galafre
Those rugged names to our like mouths grow Steele.

That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp:
Thy age, like ours, lost of its John Cheek,
Hath not learning work than toad or asp,
When thou taught'st Cambridge and King

2. A small poem.

Let us into the city presently,
To suit some gentlemen well skill'd in musick;
I have a sonnet that will serve the turn. Shaksp.

SONNETTER, n. f. [sonnetter, Fr. from sonnet.] A small poet, in contempt.

Alas mo, for extemporal god of rhyme; for I am sure I shall turn sonnetter. Shakspere.
There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: your makers of parterres and flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetters in this art. Spectator.

What wouldst thou this madrigal would be,
To be no star'd hackney sonnetter or me!
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the best brightness! how the style refines!
Pope.

SONOROUS, adj. [sonus and fero, Lat.] Giving a ringing sound.

This will appear, let the subject matter of sounds be what it will; either the atmosphere, or the ethereal part thereof, or soniferous particles of bodies. Derham.

SONORIFICK, adj. [sonorus and facio, Lat.] Producing sound.

If he should ask me why a clock strikes, and points to the hour; and I should say, it is by an indicating form and sonorifick quality, this would be unsatisfactory. Watts.

SONOROUS, adj. [sonore, Fr. sonorus, Latin.]

1. Loud sounding; giving loud or shrill sound. Bodies are distinguished as sonorous or unsonorous.

All the while Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds;
At which the universal host went
A shout that tore hell's concave. Milton.

2. High sounding; magnificent of sound.

The Italian opera, amidst all the meannets and familiarity of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression. Addison.

SONOROUSLY, adv. [from sonorous.] With high sound; with magnificence of sound.

SONOROUSNESS, n. f. from sonorous.]

1. The quality of giving sound.

Enquiring of a maker of viols and lutes of what age he thought lutes ought to be, to attain their full and best sounding for sonorousness, he replied, That in some twenty years would be requisite, and in others forty. Boyle.

2. Magnificence of sound.

SOON, adv. [suns, Gothick; rona, Sax. juen, Dutch.]

1. Before long time be past; shortly after any time assigned or supposed.

Nor did they not perceive their evil sights,
Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd. Milt.
You must obey me, soon or late;
Why should you vainly tuggle with your fate? Dryden.

2. Early; before any time supposed: opposed to late.

O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late. Shaksp.
Do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner. Hebrews.

How is it that you are come so soon to-day?
The earlier stayeth for the later, and not that the later cometh sooner. Bacon.

3. Readily; willingly.

I would as soon see a river winding through woods and meadows, as when it is toll'd up in to many whimsical figures at Versailles. Addison.

4. It has in Sidney the signification of an adjective, whether licitiously or according to the custom of his time.

He hath preserved Argulus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

5. Soon as. Immediately; at the very time.

As soon as he came nigh unto the camp, he saw the half and the dance. Exodus.

Nor was his virtue poison'd, soon as born,
With the too early thoughts of being king. Dryden.

Feasts, and business, and pleasures, and enjoyments, seem great things to us, whilst we think of nothing else; but as soon as we add death to them, they all sink into an equal littleness. Law.

SOONLY, adv. [from soon.] Quickly; speedily. This word I remember in no other place; but if soon be, as it seems once to have been, an adjective, soonly is proper.

A man meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and, soonly approving of it, places it in his work. Morgan.

SOOPERARY, n. f. [sepindus, Latin.] A plant.

SOOT, n. f. [rot, Saxon; soot, Thendick; soot, Dutch.] Condensed or embodied smoke.

Soot, though thin spread in a field, is a very good compost.

If the fire be not kept within the tunnel of the chimney, and some appointed to sweep down the soot, the house will be in danger of burning. Level.

Of they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constraining; drugg'd as oft
With hatefullest distill'd, with'd their jaws,
With soot and embers fill'd. Milton.

Our household gods, that droop upon our hearts,
Each from his venerable face shall loath
The Macedonian man, and thence again. Dryden.

SOOTED, adj. [from soot.] Smeared, manured, or covered with soot.

The land was sooted before. Mortimer.

SOOTERKIN, n. f. A kind of false birth fabled to be produced by the Dutch women from sitting over their stoves.

When Jove was, from his towering head,
Of wit's fair goddess brought to bed,
There follow'd at his lying-in,
For after-birth, a sooterkine. Swift.

SOOTH, n. f. [roð, Sax.] Truth; reality. Obsolete.

Sir, understand you this of me in sooth,
The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from all access of suitors,
Until the elder sister first be wed. Shakspere.

He looks like sooth; he says he loves my daughter,
I think so too; for never gnaw'd the moon
Upon the water, as he'll stand and read
My daughter's eyes. Shakspere.

If I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change caps. Comden.

The very sooth of it is, that an ill-hat has the force of an ill fate. L'Estrange.

I did not mean to chide you;
For, sooth to say, I hold it noble in you
To cherish the distressed. Roe.

SOOTH, adj. [roð, Sax.] Pleasing; delightful.

Some other means I have,
Which once of Melibæus old I learn'd,
The soothful shepherd that e'er pip'd on plains. Milton.

SOOTH, n. f. Sweetness; kindness. This seems to be the meaning here.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! Shakspere.

To SOOTH, v. a. [zerodian, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to please with blandishments.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our sense
The corke of rebellion, insulence, sedition. Shaksp.
Can I sooth tyranny?

Seem pleas'd to see my royal master murder'd,
His crown usurp'd, a distaff in the throne? Dryden.

By his fair daughter is the chief confidant,
Who sooths to dear delight his anxious mind,
Successful all her suit on eff's prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love. Pope.

Thanks he that Memnon, soldier as he is,
Thoughtless and dull, will listen to his soothings! Rowe.

I've tried the force of every reason on him,
Sooth'd and carol'd, been angry, sooth'd again;
I said safety, life, and interest in his sight;
But all are vain, he seems them all for Cato. Addison.

2. To calm; to soften; to mollify.

The beldame
Sooths her with blandishments, and frights with threats. Dryden.

3. To gratify; to please.

This calm'd his cares; sooth'd with his future home
And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.

SOOTHER, n. f. [from sooth.] A flatterer; one who gains by blandishments.

I cannot flatter: I defy
The tongue of flattery. Shakespeare
To SOPHISTIZE. v. n. [sooth and say] To pretend to foretell.

A dædal, possessed with a spirit of divination, not as which brought her masters much gain by foresaying. Arts.

SOPHESYER. n. f. [from sooth/say] A foreteller; a predictor; a prognosticator.

Scarcely was Mutidorus made partaker of this oft blinding light, when there were found numbers of foresayers, who affirmed strange and incredible things should be performed by that child. Sidney.

A foreshayer bids you beware the ideo of March.
Shakespeare

He was animated to expect the papacy by the prediction of a foreshayer, that one should succeed Pope Leo, whose name should be Adrian, an aged man of mean birth, and of great learning and wisdom. Bacon

SOPHINNESS. n. f. [from sooty] The quality of being sooty; fuliginousness.

Sooty. adj. [from soot]

1. Breeding foot.

By fire of sooty coal th' alchymist turns Metals to gold. Milton.

2. Confining of foot; fuliginous.

There may be some chymical way to to defecate
this oil, that it shall not spend into a sooty matter.
Wilkins.

3. Black; dark; dusky.

All the gaily legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron;
Harpies and hydras, and all monstrous forms.
Milton.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the gnome,
And in a vapour reach'd the gloomy dome. Pope.
To SOOTY. v. n. [from soot] To make black with soot.

Then (for his own weeds) shirt and coat all rent,
Taint'd and all sootied with noisome smoke
She put him on, and over all a cloak. Chapman.

SOP. n. f. [prop, Saxon; sopa, Spanish;
soppe, Dutch.]

1. Any thing steeped in liquor, commonly to be eaten.

The bounded waters
Would lift then bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe. Shakespeare.
Draw, you rogue! for though it be night, yet the moon shines: I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you. Shakespeare.

Sop in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself. Bacon

2. Any thing given to pacify, from the sop given to Cerberus.

The prudent Sibyl had before prepar'd
A sop, in honey steep'd, to charm the guard;
Which mix'd with powerful drugs, she cast before
His greedy grinning jaws, just op'd to roar. Dryden.

All nature is not cured with a sop; quarrelsome men, as well as quarrelsome cats, are worse for tar usage. L'Estrange.

To Cerberus they give a sop,

Latin.]

1. A disputant fallaciously subtle; an artful but insidious logician.

A subtle traitor needs no sophister. Shakespeare.
If a heathen philosopher brings arguments from reason, which none of our atheistical sophisters can confute, for the immortality of the soul, I hope they will so weigh the consequences, as neither to talk nor live as if there was no such thing. Denham.

Not all the subtle objections of sophisters and rabblers, against the gospel, so much prejudiced the reception of it, as the reproach of those crimes with which they asperited the assemblies of christians.
Rogers.

2. A professor of philosophy; a sophist.

This sense is antiquated.
Aldemius the sophister hath arguments to prove,

To SOPHISTICATE. v. a. [sophistiquer, Fr.
from sophist.] To adulterate; to corrupt with something spurious.

If the passions of the mind be strong, they easily sophisticate the understanding; they make it apt to believe upon every slender warrant, and to imagine unfalsifiable truth where scarce any probable show appeareth. Hooker.

Here 's three of us are sophisticated. Shakespeare.
Divers experiments succeeded not, because they were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones. Buch.

The only persons amongst the heathens, who sophisticated nature and philosophy, were the sophists; who assumed a total, unchangeable consideration of causes, reaching even to the eternal acts of man's will. Smith.

Yet the rich cultives may their bounding spare,
They purchase but sophisticated ware
'Tis prodigality that buys a deceit,
Where both the giver and the taker cheat. Dryden.

The eye hath its coats and humours sophisticated and colourless, lest it should tinge and sophisticate
The light that it lets in by a natural jaundice.
Bentley.

SOPHISTICATE. part. adj. [from the verb.] Adulterate; not genuine.

Wine sparkles brighter far than the,
'Tis pure and right, without deceit,
And that no woman e'er will be;
No, they are all sophisticated. Cowley.

Since then a great part of our scientific treasure is most likely to be adulterated, though all bears the image and superscription of truth, the only way to know what is sophisticated and what is not, is to bring all to the examen of the touchstone.
Clarke.

So truth, when only one supplied the truth,
Grew scarce and dear, and yet sophisticated. Dryden.

SOPHISTICATION. n. f. [sophistication,
Fr. from sophisticate.] Adulteration;
not genuineness.

low Lat.] A conjurer; an enchanter;
a magician.

They say this town is full of couzenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drumming conjurers that change the mind,
Soul-killing witches that deform the body,
And in thy such-like liberties of sin. Shakespeare.

The wonders of the power of witch upon kings and magistrates may be ascribed to the weakness of imagination; for it is hard for a witch or sorcerer to put on a belief that they can hurt him. Bacon.

He saw a false sorcerer arise,
All sudden gorgeous hits, and dragons glare,
And ten horn'd fiends. Pope.

The Egyptian forcerers contended with Moses;
but the wonders which Moses wrought did so far transcend the power of magicians, as made them confess it was the finger of God. Watts.

2. A parcel sorted or distributed.

To so'ttish. v. n. [a cant word.] To sit lazily on a chair; to fall at once into a chair.

"The winter sky began to frown;
Poor So'ttish must pack off to town;
From wholesome exercise and air
To so'ttish in an easy chair."

So'ttish. n. f. [from so'ttish, Saxon; so'tt, French; so'tt, Dutch.]

1. A blockhead; a dull, ignorant, stupid fellow; a dolt.

Of the so'ttish service of his son
When I so'ttish him, then he call'd me so'tt,
And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out.

Either our brags
Were crack'd of kitchen trulls, or his defects
Prov'd us unpeaking so'tts.

Soul blinded so'tts, that creep
In dirt, and never saw the wonders of the deep.

Tell him that no history or antiquity can match his conduct; and presently the so'tt, because he knows neither history nor antiquity, shall begin to misrepresent himself by himself, which is the only way for him not to fail short.

2. A wretch stupified by drinking.

That calls the staring so'tts to nasty wine.

A furly ill-bred lord,
That chides and snaps her up at every word;
A brutal so'tt, who, while he holds his bowl,
With drunken so'tts debauches the nuptial bed.

To so'ttish. v. n. To stupify; to besot; to infatuate.

I hate to see a brave bold fellow so'tt,
Made four and senseless, turn'd to whey, by love;
A driveling horn, fit for a romance.

Turns his brain, and stupifies his mind;
The so'tt moon-calf gapes.

To so'ttish. v. n. To tittle to stupidity.

So'ttish. adj. [from so'ttish.]

1. Dull; stupid; senseless; infatuate; doltish.

All's but might:
Patience is so'ttish, and impatience does
Become a dog that's mad.

Upon the report of his approach, more than half fell away and dispersed; the residue, being more delicate or more so'ttish, did abide in the field, of whom many were dunn.

He gain'd a king
After his so'ttish conqueror.

His so'ttish to offer at things that cannot be brought about.

The inhabitants of Soldania in Africk are to so'ttish and grossly ignorant, that they differ very little from brutes.

How ignorant are so'ttish pretenders to astrology!

2. Dull with intemperance.

So'ttishly. adv. [from so'ttish.] Stupidly;
dully; senselessly.

Northumberland, so'ttish mad with over great fortune, procured the king, by his letters-patent under the great seal, to appoint the lady Jane to succeed him in the inheritance of the crown.

Atheism is impudent in pretending to philosophy;
and superstition so'ttish ignorant, in fancying that the knowledge of nature tends to religion.

So'ttish to taste the pure pleasures and comforts of this world, and forego the expectation of immortality in another; and to desperately to run the risk of dwelling with everlasting burnings, plainly discovers itself to be the most pernicious folly and deplorable madness in the world.

So'ttishness. n. f. [from so'ttish.]

1. Dulness; stupidity; infatigability.

Sometimes phlegm putrifies into so'ttishness, so'ttishness into an ignorance or neglect of all religion.

Few consider what a degree of so'ttishness and confirmed ignorance men may sin themselves into.

The first part of the text, the folly and so'ttishness of atheism, will come home to their case; since they make such a noisy pretence to wit and sagacity.

2. Drunken stupidity.

No sober temperate person can look with any complacency upon the drunkenness and so'ttishness of his neighbour.

SOVEREIGN. n. f. See SOUSE.

SOVEREIGN. adj. [sovereign, Fr. sovrano,
Spanish.]

1. Supreme in power; having no superior.

As teaching bringeth us to know that God is our supreme truth; to prayer testifieth that we acknowledge him our sovereign good.

You, my sovereign lady,
Causeless have laid dignities on my head.

None of us who now thy grace explore,
But held the rank of sovereign queen before;
Till giddy chance, whose music never ceases
That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
Cald us down headlong from our high estate.

Whether I am, then, were a vassal to Jacob, and Jacob his sovereign prince by birthright, I leave the reader to judge.

2. Supremely efficacious; predominant over diseases.

A memorial of fidelity and zeal, a sovereign preservative of God's people from the venomous infection of heresy.

The most sovereign prescription in Galen is but expensive; and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse drench.

Love-wounded Protheus,
My bosom, as a bed,

Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd,
And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss.

A water we call water of paradise, by that we do test, is made very sovereign for health.

Like the foam that's drawn from
From parboil'd shoes and boots, and all the rest
Which were with any sovereign felicity blest.

Be cool, my friend, and hear my mule dispen-
Some sovereign comforts drawn from common sense.

SOVEREIGN. n. f. Supreme lord.

O, let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf.

By my sovereign, and his love, I swear,
Renown'd for faith in peace, for force in war,
On our alliance other lands depend.

SOVEREIGNLY. adv. [from sovereign.]
Supremely; in the highest degree.

He was sovereignly lovely in his countenance.

SOVEREIGNTY. n. f. [soveraineté, Fr.]

Supremacy; highest place; supreme power; highest degree of excellence.

That I, your vassal, have employ'd and paid
Your unknown sovereignty.

Happy were England, would this virtuous prince Take on his grace the sovereignty thereof.

To give laws unto a people, to institute magistrates and officers over them; to punish and pardon malefactors; to have the sole authority of making war and peace, are the true marks of sovereignty.

A mighty hunter thence he shall be fill'd
Before the Lord; as in despite of heav'n,
Or from heav'n, claiming second sovereignty.

Nothing does so gratify a haughty humour, as this piece of usurped sovereignty over our brethren.

Government of the Tongue.

That holds the woods in awful sovereignty,
Requires a depth of lodging in the ground;
High as his topmost boughs to heav'n ascend,
So low his roots to hell's dominion tend.

"I will beseech, where'er thy fate I meet,
That I may much-lov'd sovereignty meet,
And hence new beauty may thy form impart."

Let us above all things possess our souls with anticipations of the majesty and sovereignty of God.

Alexander's Grecian colonies in the Indies were almost exterminated by Sandrocottus, Seleucus recovered the sovereignty in some degree, but was forced to abandon to him the country along the Indus.

SOUGH. n. f. [from sous, French.] A subterraneous drain.

Yet could not such mines, without great pains and charges, if at all, be wrought; the delts would be so flow'd with waters, it being impossible to make any adds or soughs to drain them, that no power machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry.

Another was found in sinking a sough-pit.

SOUGHT. The pret. and part. pass. of seek.
I am sought of them that asked not for me. I am found of them that sought me not.

SOUL. n. f. [psal, Saxon; soel, Danish;
soel, Islandick; soel, Dutch.]

1. The immaterial and immortal spirit of man.

When death was overcome, he opened heaven to well to the believing Gentiles as Jews: heaven was then no receptacle to the souls of either.

Perhaps, for want of food, the soul may pine;
But that were strange, since all things bad and good

Since all God's creatures mortal and divine,
Since God himself, is her eternal food.

He remembered them of the promises, seals, and oaths, which by public authority had passed for concluding this marriage, that these, being religious bonds betwixt God and their souls, could not by any political act of state be dissolved.

So natural is the knowledge of the soul's immortality, and of some soil for the future reception of it, that we find some tract or other of it in most barbarous nations.

2. Intellectual principle.

Eloquence the soul's long charms the sense.

The eyes of our souls only then begin to when our bodily eyes are closing.

3. Vital principal.

Thou almost make'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals migrate themselves
Into the trunks of men.

Thou art, of this great world both eye and soul.

Join voices, all ye living souls! ye birds,
That singing up to heaven-gate ascend,
Bear on your wings, and in your notes, his praise.

In common discourse and writing we have the words vegetative, sensitive, and rational, and make the word soul serve for all these principles.

4. Spirit; essence; quintessence; principal part.

He has the very soul of bounty.

Charity, the soul of all the rest.

5. Interior power.

There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly dutil it out.

6. A familiar appellation expressing the qualities of the mind.

Three wenches where I stood, cry'd,
"Alas, good soul!"

This is a poor mad soul; and she says, up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you.

The poor soul sat singing by a sycamore tree,
Sing all a green willow:

Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee.

Keep the poor soul no longer in suspense,
Your charge is such as does not need defence.

Unenlarged souls are disgusted with the vision of the microscope, discovering animals which equal not a peppercorn.

Healthful.
The most is the care of every soul of us.
L'Estrange.
It is a republic; there are in it a hundred bourgeois, and about a thousand souls. Addison.
My state of health now calls to learn;
My life is here no fool's concern. Swift.
Active power.
Earth, air, and seas through empty space would rowl.
And heav'n would fly before the driving soul. Dryden.

Spirit; fire; grandeur of mind.
That he wants caution, he must needs confess;
But not a hint to give our arms success. Young.
Intelligent being in general.
Every soul in heav'n shall bend the knee. Milton.
A LIDER. See SOLDIER.
FURNISHED, adj. [from soul.] Furnished with mind.
Grave, and full temencies of thy hold, Whit thou the Grecian chiefs, though largely foul'd,
Should give the prizes they had gain'd before? Dryden.

MEAN, adj. [from soul.] Mean; low;
spiritless.
Slave, joule'st villain, dog, O rarely base! Skapiscare.

SHOT, n. f. [from soul and met.] Something paid for a soul's requiem among the Romanists.

In the Sax-on times there was a funeral duty to be paid, called, pecunia sepulchralis & symbolon monet, and in Saxon soulshot. Ayliffe.

OUND, adj. [from soul, Saxon.] Healthy; hearty; not morbid; not defeated; not hurt.

I am fall'n out with my more headier will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly lit
For the found man. Skapiscare.

He hath a heart as found as a bell, and his tongue the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks. Skapiscare.

He hath received him safe and found. Luke.

We can preserve

Subvert our minds, and understanding found. Mill.

The king visits all around,

Comforts the sick, congratulates the found; Dryden.

Honours the princely chiefs.

But Cypri, and the rest of founder mind,

The fatal present to the flames design'd, Dryden to the deep.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular object, is attributed to several other objects, in account of some evident reference or relation to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a found or healthy pulse, a found, condition, found sleep, are all so called, with reference to a found and healthy constitution; but if we speak of found doctrine, or found speech, this is a way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. Watts.

Right; not erroneous; orthodox.

Whom although to know be life, and joy to make known of his name; yet our foundest knowledge is to know that we know him not as much as he is, either can know him, and our safest coquenee concerning him is silence. Hooker.

Let my heart be found in thy statutes. Psalms.

Sound, and yet not trivial, catechetic institution. Felton.

The rules are found and useful, and may serve to devotion. Wake.

Stout; strong; lusty.

The men are very strong and able of body; and therefore either give found strokes with their clubs or with their light, or else snout strong shots with their bows. Abbot.

Valid; not failing.

They reserved their titles, tenures, and dignities whole and found to themselves. Spenser.

Fast; hearty. It is applied to sleep.

Now wak'd from found sleep,

Not on the flow'ry bed I found me laid

In balmy sweet. Milton.

SOUND, adv. Soundly; heartily; completely fast.

The messenger approaching to him spake,
But his waste words return'd to him in vain;
So found he slept that nought might him awake.

Fairy Queen.
SOUND, n. f. [sonde, French.] A shallow sea, such as may be sounded.

The found of Denmark, where thaps pay toll. Camden

Wake,
Behold I come, sent from the Stygian found,
As a dire vapour that had el' it the ground,
T' hugender with the night, and blait the day.

Len Jonson.

I am young Thaisa bore, the bright mermaid

Of Phoreys, dreading in the founds and seas. Pipe

SOUND, n. f. [sonde, French.] A probe, an instrument used by chirurgeons to feel what is out of reach of the fingers.

The patient being laid on a table, put the found til it meet with some resistance. Sharp.

To SOUND, v. a.

1. To search with a plummet; to try depth.

In this secret there is a gulf, which shore we have we shall never found. Hooker.

You are, Hasting, much too shallow

To find the bottom of the after times. Shalke.

2. To try; to examine.

Has he never before founded you in this business? Skapiscare

Invites these lords, and those he meant to found. Donce

I was in jest,

And by that offer meant to found your bread. Inglen.

I've founded my Numidian, man by man,

And find 'em ripe for a revolt. Aulfin

To SOUND, v. n. To try with the sounding line.

The shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country, and founden, and found it near twenty fathoms. Ayl.

Beyond this we have no more a positive distinct notion of infinite space than a mariner has of the depth of the sea, where having let down a large portion of his sounding line, he reaches no bottom.

Locke.

SOUND, n. f. [siipa, Latin.] The cattle-fish. Answarth.

SOUND, n. f. [son, Fr. sonus, Latin.]

1. Any thing audible; a noise; that which is perceived by the ear.

Heaps of huge words uphoarded hideously

With horrid found, though having little sense,

And thereby wanting due intelligence,

Have man'd the face of goodly poetry,

And made a noisier of their faculty. Spenser.

Come, let us, cheer we up his fighths,

And show the best of our delights;

I'll charm the air to give a found.

While you perform your antick round. Shalke

Doth a time again a stone in the bottom of the water, and it maketh a found; so a long pole stuck up in gravel, in the bottom of the water, maketh a found. Bacon.

The warlike found of trumpets loud

When'er he spoke, his voice was heard around.

Loud as a trumpet with a silver found. Dryden.

That which is conveyed into the brain by the ear is called found; though, all it adest the percep-ceptive part, it be nothing but motion. Locke.

2. Mere empty noise opposed to meaning.

He contented himself with doubtful and general terms, which might make no ill found in men's ears. Locke.

Let us consider this proposition as to its meaning; for it is the sense and not found that must be the principle. Locke.

O lavish land! for found at such expence?

But then, the fates it in her bills for sense. Young.

To SOUND, v. n.

1. To make a noise; to emit a noise.

Trumpet once more to found at general doom.

Milton.

That with one blast through the whole band does bound,
And first taught speaking-trumpets how to found. Dryden.

Thither the silver sounding lyres
Shall call the tending loves and young desires. Dryden.
2. To exhibit by found, or likeness of found

Why do you start, and seem to fear

Things that do found to us? Shalke.

They being told there was small hope of cure

To be expected to their evils from hence,

Were willing at the first to give an ear

To any thing that sounded liberty. Ben Jonson.

This relation found rather like a chymical dream than a philosophical truth. Wicks.

3. To be conveyed in found.

From you founded out the word of the Lord.

1 Theologian.

To SOUND, v. a.

1. To cause to make a noise; to play on.

And many nymphs about them flocking round,

And many trumps which then horns did found. Spenser.

Michael had found

Th' archangel trumpet. Milton.

Alcimus lay, none to renown'd

The warrior trumpet in the field to found;

With breathing beats to kindle fierce alarms,

And route to dare their fate in honourable arms. Dryden.

2. To betoken or direct by a found.

Once Jove from Ida did both bolts hurl;

And, when he pleas'd to thunder, part the fray;

Here heav'n in vain that kind retreat should found,

He leader cannon had the thunder down'd. Waller.

3. To celebrate by found.

Sun found his praise. Milton.

So UNBOARD, n. f. [found and board.]

Board which propagates the found in organs.

Try it without any foundboard along, only harp-with at one end of the string. Bacon.

As in an or, an, from one blast of wind,

To many a row of pipes the foundboard breathes. Milton.

So UNDOING, adj. [from found.] Sonorous;

having a magnificent sound.

Obsolete words may thereby revived, when more found or more significant than those in practice. Dryden.

So UNDO, adv. [from found.]

1. Healthily; heartily.

2. Lustily; stoutly; strongly.

When Duncan is asleep,

Where to the rather shall this hard day's journey

Soundly invite him. Shalke.

They did ply

My feet and hands with cords, and to the mast

With other half is made me foundly fast. Chapman.

Who had to often in your aid

So many ways been foundly paid. Hudibras.

Have no concern,

Provided Punch, for there's the jest.

Be foundly maul'd, and plague the rest. Swift.

Their nobility and gentry are one half maul'd, banished, or converted: they all foundly feel the smart of the last Irish war. Swift.

3. Truly; rightly.

The wisest are always the readiest to acknowledge,

that foundly to judge of a fact is the weightiest thing which any man can take upon him. Hooker.

The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is so foundly and ortho-doxy settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to our religion. Bacon.

4. Fast; closely; it is used of sleeping.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,

Unto that elfen knight he had him try,

Where he slept foundly, void of evil thought. Fairy Queen.

When the succession of ideas ceases, our perception of duration ceases with it, which every one experiments whilst he sleeps foundly. Locke.

SOURNESS, n. f. [from found.]

1. Health; heartiness.

I would I had that corporal foundness now,
As when thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership. Shakespeare.

2. Truth; rectitude; incorrupt state.

In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time: other odds there was none amongst them, saving only that some fell sooner away, and some later, from the foundness of belief. Hooker.

Lady is misled in his politics; but he hath given proof of his foundness in religion. Swift.

As the health and strength, or weakness, of our bodies is very much owing to their methods of treating us when we were young, so the foundness or folly of our minds is not less owing to those first teapings and ways of thinking, which we eagerly received from the love, tenderness, authority, and constant conversation of our mothers. Lewis.

3. Strength; solidity.

This predestined, it may stand then very well with strength and foundness of reason, even thus to answer. Hobbes.

SOUR, n. f. [soupe, Fr.] Strong decoction of flesh for the table.

Spongy morsels in strong ragouts are found,

And in the soup the flimsy trail is drown'd.
Let the cook doubt the bark of the footman's new levery; or, when he is going up with a dish of soup, let her follow him softly with a ladle-toll. Swift.

SOUR, adj. [run, runig, Saxon; sur,
Welsh.]

1. Acid; austere; pungent on the palate with astringency, as vinegar, or unripe fruit.

All four things, as vinegar, provoke appetite.

Their drink is sour. Bacon.

But let the bounds of licences be fix'd;

Not things of disagreeing natures mix'd,

Not sweet with sour, nor lards with serpents join'd. Dryden.

Both ways deceitful is the wine of power;

When new 'tis heady, and when old 'tis sour. Harte.

2. Harsh of temper; crabbed; peevish;

raucous; severe.

He was a scholar,

Lofty and sour to those that lov'd him not. Shakespeare.

A man of pleasant and popular conversation,

rather free than sour and reserved. Wotton.

Tiberius, otherwise a very sour man, would punctually perform this rite unto others, and expect the same. Brown.

3. Afflictive; painful.

Let me embrace these sour adversities;

For wife men say it is the wisest course. Shakespeare.

4. Expressing discontent.

He said a sour thing to Laura the other day. Tatler.

Sullen and sour, with discontented mien

Jocasta frown'd. Pope.

The lord treasurer often looked on me with a sour countenance. Swift.

SOUR, n. f. [from the adjective.] Acid substance.

A thousand sours to temper with one sweet,

To make it seem more dear and dainty. Spenser.

To SOUR, v. a.

1. To make acid.

His angelick nature had none of that carnal

seven which ferments to the souring of ours. Decay of Piety.

Thus kneaded up with milk, the new made man

His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;

Till knowledge misapplied, misunderstood,

And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood. Dryden.

One passion, with a different turn,

Makes wit inflame or anger burn;

So the sun's heat, with different pow'rs,

Repens the grape, the liquor sours. Swift.

2. To make harsh, or unkindly.

Tutts of graft sour land. Mortimer.

3. To make uneasy; to make less pleasing.

Hail, great King!

To find your happiness, I must report

The queen is dead. Shakespeare.

He brought envy, malice, and ambition, into Paradise, which sour'd to him the sweetness of the place. Dryden.

4. To make discontented.

Not my own disgrace

Hath ever made me sour my patient cheek.

Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face. Shakespeare.

Three crabbed mouths had sour'd themselves to death,

Ere I could make thee open thy white hand. Shakespeare.

In me, as yet ambition had no part;

Pride had not sour'd, nor wrath debas'd, my heart. Harte.

To SOUR, v. n.

1. To become acid.

Asks milk, when it sours in the stomach, and when turned sour, will purge thoroughly. Arbushut.

Kings that rule

Behind the hidden sources of the Nile. Addison.

2. Original; first cause.

This source of men, while yet but few,

With some regard to what is just and right

Shall lead their lives. Milton.

This is the true source and original of this mil-luct. Dryden.

Of himself is none;

But that eternal Infinite, and one,

Who never did begin, who never can end,

On him all beings, as their source, depend. Dryden.

3. First producer.

Famous Greece,

That source of art and cultivated thought,

Which they to Rome, and Romans thither, brought. Waller.

SOURDET, n. f. [from sourd, Fr.] The little pipe of a trumpet.

SOURISH, adj. [from sour.] Somewhat sour.

By distillation we obtain a sourish spirit, which will dissolve coal. Boyle.

1. With acidity.

The stern Athenian prince

Then sourly snail'd. Dryden.

SOURNESS, n. f. [from sour.]

1. Acidity; acuteness of taste.

Sourness consisteth in some grossness of the body;

and incorporation doth make the mixture of the body more equal, which induceth a milder taste. Bacon.

If the spring, like youth, it yields an acid taste;

But summer doth, like age, the sourness waste. Denham.

He knew

For fruit the grafted pear-tree to disuse,

And tame to plumbs the sourness of the trees. Dryden.

Of acid or sour one has a notion from taste,

sourness being one of those simple ideas which one cannot describe. Asbuthnot.

Has his sourness, drawn to near its end?

Pope.

2. Asperity; harshness of temper.

Pelagius curped at the curious neatness of men's apparel in those days, and, through the sourness of his disposition, spoke somewhat too harshly thereof. Hooker.

He was never thought to be of that sourness

sourness, which some men pretend to in religion. King Charles.

Her religion is equally free from the weakness of superstition and the sourness of enthusiasm: it is not of an uncomfortable melancholy nature. Addison.

Take care that no sourness and moroseness

gingle with our serious frame of mind. Neale.

SOURSOR, n. f. [guanabano, Lat.] A tard-apple.

It grows in several parts of the Spanish We

Oh, though it sink, they drop by drop impart;

But souse the cabbage with a bounteous bean. Pope.

2. To throw into water. A ludicrous sense.

They soused me into the Thames with as remote as they drown blind puppies. Shakespeare.

Who those were that run away,

And yet gave out th' had won the day,

Although the rabble soused them for it

O'er head and ears in mud and dirt. Butt.

They soused me over head and ears in mud

when a boy, so that I am now one of the cate-hardened of the Ironides. Mil.

To SOUSE, v. n. [Of this word I know to the original: it must come from sous, diffous, down, Fr.] To fall as a bird its prey.

Thus on some silver swan or tim'rous hare,

Jove's bird comes sousing down from upper air,

Her crooked talons trus the fearful prey,

Then out of sight the towers. Dryden.

Jove's bird will souse upon th' tim'rous hare,

And tender kids with his sharp talons tear. Dryden.

To SOUSE, v. a. To strike with sudden violence, as a bird strikes his prey.

The gallant monarch is in arms,

And like an eagle o'er his airy towers,

To souse annoyance that comes near his nest. Shakespeare.

SOUSE, adv. With sudden violence.

Oh undistinguish'd space of woman's wit! Shakespeare.

This which yields or fills all space. Milton.

Pure space is capable neither of resistance nor motion. Locke.

Space and motion can never be actually infinite: they have a power only and a capacity of being increased without end; so that no space can be assigned so vast, but still a larger may be imagined; no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived. Bentley.

2. Any quantity of place.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich east to boot. Shakespeare.

There was but two ways to escape; the one through the woods, about ten miles space to Widdow.

In such a great ruin, where the fragments are great and hard, it is not possible they should be so adjusted in their fall, but that they would lie hollow, and many unfilled spaces would be intercepted amongst them. Burnet.

Measuring first with careful eyes
The space his spear could reach, aloud he cries. Dryden.

3. Quantity of time.

There is a competent time allowed every man;
and, as it is certain death is the conclusion of it, 'tis possible some space before death. Hammond.

Nine times the space that measures day and night
To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
Lay vanquish'd, rolling in the fiery gulph, Confounded, though immortal. Milton.

In a lever the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight. Wilkins.

God may defer his judgments for a time, and give a people a longer space of repentance: he may stay till the iniquities of a nation be full; but sooner or later they have reason to expect his vengeance. Tillotson.

The lives of great men cannot be writ with any tolerable degree of elegance or exactness, within a short space after their decease. Addison.

4. A small time; a while.

Sith for me ye fight, to me this grace
Both yield, to stay your deadly strife a space. Fairy Queen.

Composition quell'd
His best of man, and gave him up to tears
A space, till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess. Milton.

SPACIOUS. adj. [spacieux, Fr. spatiosus, Lat.] Wide; extensive; roomy; not narrow.

The former buildings, which were but mean, contented them not: spacious and ample churches
they erected throughout every city. Hooker.

Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty;
And yet seem cold. Shakespeare.

Mercer with spacious beauty fills the sight,
But too much awe chafes the bold delight. Cowley.

Like an English gen'l will I die,
And all the ocean make my spacious grave:
Women and cowards on the land may lie;
The sea's a tomb that's proper for the brave. Dryden.

to the end of the little finger extended;

nine inches.

A foot, the length of it, is a sixth part of the fathom; a span, one eighth; a palm, or hand's breadth, one twenty-fourth; a thumb's breadth, or inch, one seventy-second; and a fore-finger's breadth, one ninety-sixth. Holder.

Will you with counters sum

The vast proportion of his minute,

And buckle in a waste most fathomless,

With spans and inches for diminutive

As fears and reasons? Shakespeare.

Sum how brief the life of man

Runs his erring pilgrimage,

That the stretching of a span

Buckles in his sum of age. Shakespeare.

When I removed the one, although but at the distance of a span, the other would stand like Hercules's pillar. Brown.

2. Any short duration,

You have licence time

To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,

To keep your earthly audit. Shakespeare.

The virgin's part, the mother, and the wife,

So well the acted in this span of life. Waller.

Then conscience, unrelent'd by fears, began

To stretch her limits, and extend the span. Dryden.

My span is in life; the o'er-great span
Hath they'd him gold; my life is *span*d already. Shakespeare.

This soul doth span the world, and hangs connect

From either pole unto the centre;

Where in each room of the well-furnish'd tent

He lies warm, and without adventure. Herbert.

Harry, whose *span*ful and well-measur'd song

First taught our English musick how to span

Words with just note and accent, not to scan

With Midas' ears, counting short and long. Milton.

SPAN. The preterit of spin.

Together furiously they run

That to the ground came horse and man;

The blood out of their helmets span,

So sharp were their encounters. Dryden.

The mossy branches of an oak half dead. Fairy Queen.

Thus in a starry night fond children cry

For the rich spangles that adorn the sky. Hall.

The twinkling spangles, the ornaments of the upper world, lose their beauty and magnificence vulgar spectators see them but as a confused huddle of petty illuminants. Glanville.

That now the dew with spangles deck'd the ground,

A sweeter spot of earth was never found. Dryden.

TO SPANGLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To besprinkle with spangles or shining bodies.

They never meet in grove or green,

By fountain clear, or spangled starlight shewn. Shakespeare.

What stars do spangle heaven with such beauty,

As those two eyes become that heavenly face. Shakespeare.

Unpin that spangled breastplate which you wear,

That th' eyes of busy fools may be kept there. Dumas.

Four faces each

Had, like a double Janus; all their shape

Spangled with eyes; more numerous than those Of Argus. Milnes.

Then appear'd

Spangling the hemisphere, then first adorn'd

With the bright luminaries, that set and rose. Milnes.

He cuts out a silk mantle from the skies,

Where the most brightly aure pleas'd the eye;

Thus he with starry vapours spangles all,

Took in their prime, as they grow, rise, and fall. Cowley.

The spacious firmament on high,

With all the blue ethereal sky,

And spangled heav'ns, a shining frame,

Their great Original proclaim. Spectator.

spere, Dutch; sparc, old Fr. sparum, low
Latin.]

1. A long weapon with a sharp point, used in thrusting or throwing; a lance.

Those brandishers of spears,
From many cities drawn, are they that are our hinderers. Chapman.

Th' Egyptian, like a hill, himself did rear,
Like some tall tree; upon it seem'd a spear. Cowley.

Nor wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both shield and spear. Milton.

The flying spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.

The rout'd-up lion, resolute and slow,
Advances full on the pretended spear. Thomson.

2. A lance, generally with prongs, to kill fish.

The orderers watching, until they be past up into some narrow creek, below them cast a strong corded net athwart the stream, with which, and their loud shouting, they stop them from retiring, until the ebb have abandoned them to the hunters mercy, who,
by an old custom, share them with such indifference, as if a woman with child be present, the babe in her womb is gratified with a portion: a point also observed by the spear hunters in taking of salmon.
Carver.

To SPEAR. v. a. [from the noun.] To kill or pierce with a spear.

To SPEAR. v. n. To shoot or sprout. This is commonly written spire.

Let them not lie lest they should spear, and the

1. Noting a sort or species.

A special idea is called by the schools a species.
Watts.

2. Particular; peculiar.

Most commonly with a certain special grace of her own, wagging her lips, and grinning instead of smiling. Sidney.

The several books of scripture, having had each some several occasion and particular purpose which caused them to be written, the contents thereof are according to the exigence of that special end whereunto they are intended. Hooker.

On all men alive,
I never yet beheld that special face,

Which I could fancy more than any other. Shakspeare.

Nought to vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give.

Shakspeare.

The fourth commandment, in respect of any one definite and special day of every week, was not simply and perpetually moral. Watts.

Our Saviour is represented every where in scripture as the special patron of the poor and the afflicted, and as laying their interest to heart more nearly than those of any other of his members. Atterbury.

3. Appropriate; designed for a particular purpose.

O'Neil, upon his marriage with a daughter of Kildare, was made denizen by a special act of parliament. Davies.

Such things are evident by natural light, which men of a mature age, in the ordinary use of their faculties, with the common help of mutual society, may know and be sufficiently assured of without the help of any special revelation. Wilkes.

4. Extraordinary; uncommon.

That which necessity of some special time doth cause to be enjoined, bindeth no longer than during that time, but doth afterward become free. Hooker.

The other scheme takes special care to attribute all the work of conversion to grace. Hammond.

Though our charity should be universal, yet as it cannot be actually exercised but on particular times, so it should be chiefly on special opportunities. Spratt.

He bore

A paunch of the same bulk before;
Which still he had a special care
To keep well cramm'd with thimble fare. Hudibras.

On these two general heads all other specialities are dependent. Hooker.

The packet is not come
Where that and other specialities are bound. Shaksp.
Specialty of rule hath been neglected. Shaksp.

When men were sure, that, in case they rested upon a bare contract without speciality, the other party might wage his law, they would not rest upon such contracts without reducing the debt into a specialty, which accorded many suits. Hale.

SPECIES. n. f. [species, Latin.]

1. A sort; a subdivision of a general term.

A special idea is called by the schools a species; it is one common nature that agrees to several singular individual beings: so horse is a special idea or species, as it agrees to Bucephalus, Trot and Snowball. Watts.

2. Clafs of nature; single order of beings.
He intendeth the care of species or common natures, but letteth loose the guard of individuals or single existencies. Brown.

The Phoenix Pindar is a whole species alone.

Cowley.

For we are animals no less,
Although of different species. Hudibras.
Thou nam'st a race that must proceed from me,
Yet my whole species in myself I see. Dryden.

A mind of superior or meaner capacities than human, would constitute a different species, though united to a human body in the same laws of connexion: and a mind of human capacities would make another species, if united to a different body in different laws of connexion. Bentley.

3. Appearance to the senses; any visible or sensible representation.

An apparent diversity between the species visible and audible is, that the visible doth not mingle in the medium, but the audible doth. Bacon.

It is a most certain rule, how much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more mist it is to transmit the species. Ray.

The species of the letters illuminated with blue, were nearer to the lens than those illuminated with deep red, by about three inches, or three and a quarter; but the species of the letters illuminated with indigo and violet appeared so confused and indistinct, that I could not read them. Newton.

4. Representation to the mind.

Wit in the poet, or wit-writing, is no other than the faculty of imagination in the writer, which searches over all the memory for the species or ideas of those things which it designs to represent. Dryden.

As there was in the splendour of the Roman empire a less quantity of current species in Europe than there is now. Rome possessed a much greater proportion of the circulating species of its time than any European city. Arbuthnot.

7. Simples that have place in a compound medicine.

SPECIFICICAL. adj. [specificque, Fr. species SPECIFIC.] and facio, Lat.]

1. That makes a thing of the species of which it is.

That thou to truth the perfect way may'st know,
To thee all her specifick forms I'll show. Denham.

The understanding, as to the exercise of this power, is subject to the command of the will, though, as to the specifick nature of its acts, it is determined by the object. South.

By whose direction is the nutriment so regularly distributed into the respective parts, and how are they kept to their specifick uniformities? Glanville.

These principles I consider not as occult qualities, supposed to result from the specifick forms of things, but as general laws of nature, by which the things themselves are formed; their truth appearing to us by phenomena, though their causes be not yet discovered. Newton.

As all things were formed according to these specifick platforms, so their truth must be measured from their conformity to them. Norris.

Specifick gravity is the appropriate and peculiar gravity or weight which any species of natural bodies have, and by which they are plainly distinguishable from all other bodies of different kinds. Quincy.

The specifick qualities of plants reside in their native spirit, oil, and essential salt: for the water, fixt salt, and earth, appear to be the same in all plants. Arbuthnot.

Specifick difference is that primary attribute which distinguishes each species from one another, while they stand ranked under the same general nature or genus. Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit, yet this is but a general or generic difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry: the specifick difference of wine therefore is its pressure from the grape; as cyder is pressed from apples, and perry from pears. Watts.

2. [In medicine.] Appropriated to the cure of some particular distemper. It is usually applied to the arcana, or medicines that work by occult qualities.

The operation of purging medicines has been referred to a hidden propriety, a specifick virtue, and the like shifts of ignorance. Bacon.

If the would drink a good decoction of sarsa, with the usual specificks, the might enjoy a good health. Wijeman.

SPECIFICALLY. adv. [from specifick.]

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast.
And often bounding on the bruised grass
As for great joy of his new comen guest. Fairy Queen.

Speckled vanity

Will sicken soon and die,
And leprous sin will melt from earthly mould. Milton.

Saw'st thou not late a speckled serpent
His gilded spires to climb on yon fair tree?
Before this happy minute I was he. Dryden.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their fork'd tongue and pointed tail Shall play. Pope.

The tortoise here and elephant riding,
Transform'd to combs, the peacock and the white.
Pope.

PECK or Speight. n. f. A woodpecker.
Ainsworth.

SPECTACLE. n. f. [Spectacle, Fr. Spectaculum, Latin.]

 with the mother tongue, by the assistance of a spell- ling book it is legible. Speelman

Another cause, which hath maimed our language is a foolish opinion that we ought to spell exactly as we speak. Swift

2. To read.

If I read aught in heaven,
 Or heav'n write aught of fate, by what the stars
 Voluminous or single characters,
 In their conjunction met, give me to spell,
 Sorrows and labours, opposition, hate, Attend thee. Milton

When gowns, not arms, repell'd
 The fierce Egipt, and the African bold,
 Whether to fight, flee, or to unfold
 The drift of hollow states, hard to be spelt. Milton

And may at last my weary ago
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 Where I may sit and rightly spell
 Of every star that moves a doth glow,
 And every herb that springs and grows.

With a festival She'll first receive thee; but will spice thy bread With flow'ry poisons. Chapman.

These hymns may work on future wits, and so May great grandchildren of thy prunes grow; And so, though not revive, embalm and spice The world, which else would putrify with vice. Donne.

What though some have a fraught Of cloves and nutmegs, and in cinnamon sail, If thou hast wherewithal to spice a draught, When griefs prevail? Herbert.

SPICER. n. f. [from spice.] One who deals in spice. Nauges have been derived from occupations as Salter and Spicer. Canden.

SPICERY. n. f. [spicerie, Fr. from spice.] 1. The commodity of spices. Their canals were laden with spicery, and balm and myrrh. Raleigh.

She in whose body The western treasure, eastern spicery, Europe and Africk, and the unknown rest, Were easily found. Donne.

A repository of spices. The honey, the cellar and its families, are too well known to be here insisted upon. Addison.

SPICK AND SPAN. [This word I should not have expected to have found authorized by a polite writer. Span-new is used by Chaucer, and is supposed to come from spannan, to stretch, Saxon; capandere, Latin; whence span. Span-new is therefore originally used of cloth newly extended or dressed at the clothiers, and spick and span is newly extended on the spikes or tenters: it is however a low word.] Quite new; now first used. While the honour thou hast got In spick and span new, pouting hot, Strike her up bravely. Butler.

They would have these reduced to nothing, and then others created spick and span new out of nothing. Burke.

I keep no antiquated stuff; But spick and span I have enough. Swift.

SPIGNELE or SPIGNEL. n. f. [spicula, Lat.] The herb malmudony or bearwort. Dut.

SPIGOSITY. n. f. [spica, Lat.] The quality of being spiked like ears of corn; fullness of ears. Dut.

SPICEY. adj. [from spice.] 1. Producing spice; abounding with aromatics. Off at sea north-east winds blow Sabean odour, from the spicy shore Of Araby the blest: with such delay Well pleas'd they suck their counse; and many a league, Cheer'd with the grateful smell, old ocean smiles. Milnes.

For them the Idumean balm did sweat, And in hot Ceilon spicy forests grew. Dryden.

2. Aromatick; having the qualities of spice. The regimen in this disease ought to be of spicy and cephalick vegetables, to dispel the viscosity. Arbutnot.

Under southern skies exalt their sails, Led by new stars, and borne by spicy gales! Pope.

SPIDER. n. f. [Skinner thinks this word softened from spinder, or spinner, from spin: Jannus, with his usual felicity, dreams that it comes from σπίς, to extend; for the spider extends his web. Perhaps it comes from speden, Dutch, speyden, Danish, to spy, to be upon the catch. Dor, Bopa, Saxon, is a bee, or properly a humble bee, or flingish bee. May not spider be spy dor, the insect that watches the dor? The animal that is a web for flies. More direful hap betide that hated wretch. Than I can wish to adders, spiders, vipers. Swift.

The spider's web to watch we'll laud, And, when it takes the bee, We'll help out of the tyrant's hand The innocent to free. Donne.

Ipudious, restless, watchful spider, Fear no odious daniel's broom; Extend thy awful subrick wider, And spread thy business round my room. While I thy detestable fabric stare at, And think on hapless poet's fate. Take thee confin'd to noisome garret, And rudely build'd rooms of state. D. Jones.

The spider's touch how exquisitely fine! Fee'st at each thread, and lives along the line. Swift.

SPIDERCATCHER. n. f. [from spider and catcher; picus murarius, Lat.] A woodcatcher; picus murarius, Lat.] SPIDERWORT. n. f. [sphalangium, Lat.] A plant with a lily-flower, composed of six petals. Milnes.

SPIJCKER. n. f. [spijker, Dut.] A pin or peg put into the faucet to keep in liquor. Donne.

Bare Hungarian might, with those the flight wield.
Take up the spike, and play the pole in your mouth.
SPIKE. n. f. [spica, Latin.]

1. An ear of corn.
Drawn up in ranks and files, the bearded spikes
Guard it from birds, as with a stand of pikes.
Denham.

Suffering not the yellow boards to rear,
He tramples down the spikes, and intercepts the year.
Dryden.

The gleaners,
Spike after spike, their sparring harvest pick.
Thomson.

2. A long nail of iron or wood; a long rod of iron sharpened: so called from its similitude to an ear of corn.

For the body of the ships, no nation equals England for the oakum timber; and we need not borrow of any other iron for spikes, or nails to fasten them.
Bacon.

The head of your spike would be seen to more advantage, if it were placed on a spike of the tower.
Dryden.

He wears on his head the corona radiata, another type of his divinity: the spikes that shoot out represent the rays of the sun.
Addison.

SPIKE. n. f. A smaller species of lavender.
The oil of spike is much used by our artificers in their varnishes; but it is generally adulterated. Hill.
TO SPIKE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with long nails.
Lay long planks upon them, pinned or spiked
down to the pieces of oak on which they lie.
Mason.

Lay long planks upon them, spiking or pinning them down fast.
Mortimer.

2. To set with spikes.
A youth, leaping over the spiked pales, was suddenly frightened down, and in his falling he was caught by those spikes.
Weyman.

3. To make sharp at the end.
SPIKENARD. n. f. [spica nardi, Lat.] A plant; and the oil or balsam produced from the plant.

It grows plentifully in Java. It has been known to the medical writers of all ages.
Hill.

A woman, having an ambagious box of ointment of spikenard, brake and poured it on his head.
Mark.

He cast into the pile bundles of myrrh, and heaves of spikenard, enriching it with every spicy thrust.
Spectator.

SPIEL. n. f. [spylen, Dutch.]
A small shiver of wood, or thin bar of iron.

The oysters, besides gathering by hand, have a peculiar dredge, which is a thick strong net, fastened to three spies of iron, and drawn at the boat's side.
Carr.

Have near the bungle a little venthole, fitted with a spiel.
Montimer.

A small quantity of money. I know not whence derived.

The bishops, who consecrated this ground, were not to have a spiel or sportule from the credential letter.
Ayliffe.

TO SPILL. v. a. [spilian, Saxon; spullen, Dutch; spilla, Islandick.]

To shed; to lose by shedding.
Be dashed, dear God, with our true blood,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt.
Shakespeare.

Friend or brother,
He forfeits his own blood that spills another.
Shakespeare.

Themselves exact their cruelty,
And I condemn'd as this blood to spill.
They having spilt much blood, and done much waste, Sending nations; and achiev'd thereby fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey;
shall change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth.
Milton.

Medea must not draw her murdering knife,
And spill her children's blood upon the stage.
Reynolds.

TO SPILL. v. a. [from the noun.]
With treachery to shed one's mother's race;
And to revenge his blood, so justly spilt.
What is it less than to partake his guilt? Dryden.

Nor the Centaur's tale
Be here repeated; how, with lust and wine
Inflam'd, they fought and spilt their drunken souls.
At feasting hour.
Philips.

2. To destroy; to mischief.
Thus is our thought with pain of thistle tilled;
Thus be our noblest parts dried up with sorrow.
Thus is our mind with too much minding spilled.
Sidney.

Why are you so fierce and cruel?
Is it because your eyes have power to kill?
Then know that mercy is the Mighty's jewel,
And greater glory than to have than spill.
Thou all-shaking thunder,
Crack nature's mould, all germs spill at once.
That make ingrateful man.
Shakespeare.

Be not hungry with these fires;
For then their throats will kill me:
Nor look too kind on my desires;
For then my hopes will spill me. Ben Jonson.

All bodies are with other bodies fill'd;
But she receives both heav'n and earth together.
Nor are their forms by rash encounters spilt;
For there they stand, and neither toucheth either.
Davies.

3. To throw away.
This fight shall damp the raging Russian's breast,
The poison spill, and half-drawn sword arrest. Tuckey.

TO SPILL. v. a.
1. To waste; to be lavish.
Thy father bids thee spare, and chides for spilling.
Sidney.

2. To be shed; to be lost by being shed.
He was so topfull of himself, that he let spill on all the company: he spoke well indeed, but he spoke too long.
Watts.

SPILLER. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A kind of fishing line.
In harbours they are taken by spillers made of a cord, to which divers shorter are tied at a little distance, and to each of these a hook is fastened with a bait: this spiller they sink in the sea where those fishes have their accustomed haunts. Gares.

SPILLTH. n. f. [from spill.] Any thing poured out or wasted.
Our vaults have wept with drunken spilt of wine.
Shakespeare.

TO SPIN. v. a. pret. spun or span; part.
spun. [spinnan, Saxon; spinnen, Dut.]

1. To draw out into threads.
The women spin goats hair.
Frodo.

2. To form threads by drawing out and twisting any filamentous matter.
You would be another Penelope, yet all the year the spin, in Ulysses's absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths.
Shakespeare.

The fates but only spin the counter clue,
The finest of the wool is left for you.
Dryden.

3. To protract; to draw out.
By one delay after another, they spin out their whole lives, till there's no more future left before 'em.
L'Estrange.

Why should Rome fill a moment ere her time?
No, let us draw her term of freedom out
In its full length, and spin it to the last. Addison.

4. To form by degrees; to draw out tediously.
I passed lightly over many particulars, on which learned and witty men might spin out large volumes.
Digby.

It is cure lies among the lawyers, let nothing be said against intangling property, spinning out causes, and lqueezing clients.
Collier.

Men of large thoughts and quick apprehensions are not to expect any thing here, but what, being spun out of my own coarse thoughts, is fitted to men of my own size.
Locke.

The lines are weak, another's pleas'd to say;
Lord Fanny spins a thousand such a day. Pope.

5. To put into a turning motion, as a boy's top.

TO SPIN. v. a.
1. To exercise the art of spinning, or drawing threads.

We can sing our legs and arms upwards and downwards, backwards, forwards, and round, as they that spin.
Mory.

Ten thousand stalks their various blossoms spread;
Peaceful and lowly in their native soil,
They neither know to spin, nor care to toil.
For this Alcides learn'd to spin.
His club laid down, and lion's skin.
Pope.

2. [spingere, Italian.] To stream out in a thread or small current.
Together furiously they ran,
That to the ground came horse and man;
The blood out of their helmets span,
So sharp were their encounters.
Dryden.

3. To move round as a spindle.
Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n,
Rule on the earth, or earth rise on the sun;
He from the east his flaming road begins,
Or the from west her silent course advance
With motionless pace, that spinning sleeps
On her soft axle, while the paces even
And bears thee fast with the smooth air along.
Solicit not thy thoughts.
Milton.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimple some huge beam to bore
Urg'd on all hands, it mumbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing till it scopa it out.
Pope.

SPINACH. n. f. [spinachia, Latin.]
SPINAGE. n. f. plant.

It hath an apetalous flower, consisting of many filaments included in the flower-cup, which are produced in spikes upon the male plants, which are barren; but the embryos are produced from the wings of the leaves on the female plants, which afterward become roundish or angular seeds, which,
in some sorts have thorns adhering to them.
Miller.

Spinage is an excellent herb, crude or boiled.
Mortimer.

SPINAL. adj. [spina, Lat.] Belonging to the backbone.

All spinal, or such as have no ribs, but only a back bone, are somewhat analogous to them. Brown.

Those solids are entirely nervous, and proceed from the brain and spinal marrow, which by their bulk appear sufficient to furnish all the filaments or threads of the solid parts.
A. B. H. H. H.

Descending vessels from his couch, the fall
Lay'd his joint neck, and spinal marrow bound.
Philips.

SPINDLE. n. f. [spindel, Saxon.]

1. The pin by which the thread is formed, and on which it is conglomerated.

Bodies fibrous by nature incorporate with other thread, especially if there be a little wreathing;
as appears by the twisting of thread, and twisting about of spindles.
Bacon.

Sing to those that hold the vital sheers,
And turn the adamant spindle round
On which the fate of gods and men is wound.
Milton.

Upon a true repentance, God is not so fatally tied to the spindle of absolute probation, as not to keep his promise, and send merciful pardons.
L'Estrange.

So Pallas from the dusty field withdrew,
And, when imperial Jove appear'd in view,
To mind's female arts, the spindle and the clew,
Forgot the to spare her to well had they'd,
And, with that midwife's hand had told, obey'd.
Stepney.

Do you take me for a Roman matron,
Bred truly to the spindle and the loom?
A. Philips.

2. A long slender stalk.
The spindles must be tied up, and, as they grow in height, rods set by them, lest by their bending they should break.
Montimer.

3. Any thing slender. In contempt.
Repose yourself, if those spindle legs of yours will carry you to the next chair.
Dryden.

The marriage of one of our heiresses with so 402

2. [spiro, Lat.] To breathe. Not in use. Spenser.

SPIRIT. n. f. [spiritus, Lat.]

1. Breath; wind. All purges have in them a new spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach. Bacon.

All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them, but the main difference between animate and inanimate are, that the spirits of things animate are all contained within themselves, and branched in veins as blood is; and the spirits have also certain seats where the principal do reside, and whereunto the rest do resort: but the spirits in things inanimate are that in and out of the tangible parts, as air in snow. Bacon.

The balmy spirit of the western breeze. Anon.

2. [spirit, Fr.] An immaterial substance; an intellectual being.

Spirit is a substance wherein thinking, knowing, doubting, and a power of moving, dwells. Locke. She is a spirit; yet not like air or wind, Nor like the spirits about the heart or brain; Nor like those spirits which alchemists do find, When they in every thing seek gold in vain; For the all natures under heav'n doth pass, Being like those spirits which God's bright luce do see;

Or like himself, whose image once she was, Though now, alas! she scarce his shadow be: For of all forms she holds the first degree, That are to gross material bodies knit, Yet the hottest is bodyless and free, And though confin'd is almost infinite. Dante. I shall depend upon your constant friendship like the trust we have in benevolent spirits, who, though we never see or hear them, we think constantly praying for us. P.

If we include space, there will remain in the world but matter and mind; or body and spirit. Harte.

You are all of you pure spirits. I don't mean that you have no bodies that want meat and drink, and sleep and clothing; but that all that deserves to be called you, is nothing else but spirit. L.

3. The soul of man. The spirit shall return unto God that gave it. Job.

Look, who comes here? a grave unto a soul, Holding th' eternal spirit 'gainst her will. In the vile prison of afflicted breath. Shakespeare.

A wild Tartar, when he speaks A man that's handsome, valiant, wise, If he can kill him, thinks 't inherit

The noblest spirit or genius cannot be enough of mankind, to pretend to the heroic virtue. L.

8. Turn of mind; power of mind, moral or intellectual.

You were as'd
To say extremity was the trier of spirits,
That cannot chance common men could bear.

Jack but half thy mighty spirit for me.
A perfect judge will read each work of wit
With the same spirit that its author writ:
Survey the whole, nor seek slight faults to find,
Where nature moves, and rapture warms, the mind.

Intellectual powers distinct from the body.

These discourses made so deep impression upon
The mind and spirit of the prince, whose nature
Was inclin'd to adventures, that he was transported
With the thought of it.

For 'twas perhaps he also saw
The feast of Montezuma.

Sentiment; perception.
You are too great to be by me gain'd;
Your spirit is too true, your tears too certain.

Engeriness; desire.
God has changed men's tempers with the times,
And made a spirit of building succeed a spirit of destruction.

Man of activity; man of life, fire, and enterprise.

The watry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits, but they come.
Persons distinguished by qualities of the mind. A French word, happily growing obsolete.

Romantic varieties, from the rising up of some imagined spirits amongst us, conclude that the body of our church is schismatical, because the branches or members thereof were such.

On pitying God did well form'd spirits raise,
For the tollsome business of their days,
Before the gloaming nation, and to give
New life, and then the rules in peace to live.

Such spirits as he desired to please, such would obey his judges.

That which gives vigour or cheerfulness to the mind; the purest part of the body, bordering, says Sydenham, on immateriality. In this meaning it is commonly written with the plural termination.

Though thou didst but jest,
Ah my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake.

When I sit and tell
The warlike feats I've done, his spirits fly out of my story.

And when all our lamps are burnt,
The body wasted, and our spirits spent,
When we have all the learned volumes turn'd,
Which could men's wits both help and ornament,
What can we know, or what can we discern?

It was the time when gentle night began
To couch with sleep the busy spirits of man.

Toing thy penite, would heav'n my breath prolong.

How worthy such a song,
As Orpheus should transcend my lays.

All men by experience find the necessity and importance of the business of contemplation.
By means of the curious modulation of the nerves, the organs of the spirits should be saved.

Let me see body thus the secret soul
Expressed in words, with vigour fills, the whole;
Each motion guides, and every nerve sustains,
Each action, but in the effects remains.

He is always forced to drink a hearty glass, to drive thoughts of business out of his head, and to let his spirits showily enough for sleep.

Characteristical likeness; essential qualities.
Roman pieces will appear best in a room where the windows are high, because they are commonly made to a descending light, which of all other death set off men's faces in the next spirit.

16. Any thing eminently pure and refined.
Nor doth the spirit itself.

That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself.
17. That which hath power or energy.
There is in wine a mighty spirit, that will not be congealed.

18. An inflammable liquor raised by distillation: as brandy, &c.

What the chymists call spirit, they apply the name to so many different things, that they seem to have no settled notion of the thing. In general, they give the name of spirit to any distilled volatile liquor.

All spirits, by frequent use, destroy, and at last extinguish the natural heat of the stomach. To keep in distillations, what trickles down the sides of the receiver, if it will not mix with water, is oil;
if it will, it is spirit.

19. It may be observed, that in the poets spirit was a monosyllable, and therefore was often written sprite, or, less properly, spwright.

The charge thereof unto a courteous spirit Commanded was.

To SPIRIT, v. a.

1. To animate or actuate as a spirit.

So talk'd the spirited fly snake
2. To excite; to animate; to encourage;

 That it splits and tears the earth, making cracks or chasms in it some miles. Woodward.
 2. To divide; to part.
 Their logic has appeared the mere art of wrangling,
 and their metaphysics the skill of splitting an hair, of distinguishing without a difference. Watts.
 One and the same ray is by refraction disturbed, shattered, dilated, and split, and spread into many diverging rays. Newton.
 He instances Luther's feusality and disobedience, two crimes which he has dealt with; and,
 to make the more solemn shew, he split 'em into twenty. Atterbury.
 Oh! would it please the gods to split
 Thy beauty, size, and years, and wit,
 No age could furnish out a pair
 Of nymphs so graceful, wise, and fair;
 With half the lustre of your eyes,
 With half your wit, your years, and size. Swift.
 3. To dash and break on a rock.
 God's detestation, as a full and violent wind, drives him in an instant, not to the harbour, but on the rock where he will be irrecoverably split.
 Dean of Poitiers.
 Those who live by shores with joy behold
 Some wealthy vessel split on strand'd rock;
 And from the rocks leap down for shipwreck'd gold.
 And seek the tempest which the others fly. Dryden.

 The road that to the lungs this store transmits,
 Into unnumber'd narrow channels splits. Blackmore.
 2. To burst with laughter.
 Each had a gravity would make you split,
 And took his head at me—y as a wit. Pope.

S P O

3. To be broken in pieces; to be split.
 When you, and your number sav'd with you,
 Hung on our ship's mast. Shakspeare.
 These are the rocks on which the fangome tribe of lovers daily split, and on which the politician, the alchymist, and projector are cast away. Specta.
 The journey sped a rock, and the wind was so strong that we were driven directly upon it, and immediately split. Swift.
SPLITTER. n. f. [from split.] One who splits.
 How should we rejoice, if, like Judas the first,
 Those splitters of persons in sunder should burst! Swift.
SPLITTER. n. f. Bustle; tumult. A low word.
To SPOIL. v. a. [spolio, Lat. spolier,
 French.]
 1. To seize by robbery; to take away by force.
 Ye took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven an enduring substance. Hebrews.
 This mount,
 With all his verdure spoil'd, and trees admitt. Milton.
 2. To plunder; to strip of goods: with of before the thing taken.
 Yielding themselves upon the Turks faith, for the safe guard of their liberty and goods, they were most ingenuously spoil'd of all that they had. Knolles.
 Thou shalt not gain what I deny to yield,
 Nor reap the harvest, though the spoil'st the field. Prior.
 My sons their old unhappy fate despise,
 Spoil'd of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes. Pope.
 3. To corrupt; to mar; to make useless.
 [This is properly spolli: spollium, Sax.]
 Beware lest any man spoil you, through philosophy and vain deceit. Caution.
 Spiritual pride spoils many graces. Taylor.
 Women are not only spoiled by this education, but we spoil that part of the world which would otherwise furnish most instances of an eminent and exalted piety. Law.
To SPOIL. v. n.
 1. To practise robbery or plunder.
 England was infested with robbers and outlaws, which, lurking in woods, used to break forth to rob and spoil. Spenser.
 They which hate us spoil for themselves. Pfalms.
 2. To grow useless; to be corrupted.
 He that gathered a hundred bushels of ears, or apples, had thereby a property in them: he was only to look that he used them before they spoil'd, else he robbed others. Locke.
SPOIL. n. f. [spolium, Lat.]
 1. That which is taken by violence; that which is taken from an enemy; plunder;
 pillage; booty.
 The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword;
 For I have laden me with many spoils.
 I sing no other weapon but his name. Shakspeare.
 2. That which is gained by strength or effort.
 But grant our hero's hopes long toil
 And comprehensive genius crown,
 Each science and each art his spoil,
 Yet what reward, or what renown? Bentley.
 3. That which is taken from another.
 Gentle gales,
 Fanning their odoriferous wings, dispense Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole These balmy spoils. Milton.
 4. The act of robbery; robbery; waste.
 The man that hath not music in himself,
 Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
 Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils. Shakspeare.
 Too late, alas! we find
 The softness of thy sword, continued through thy foil,
 To be the only cause of unrecover'd spoil. Drayton.

S P O

- Go and speed!
 Havock, and spoil, and ruin are my gain. Malm.
 5. Corruption; cause of corruption.
 Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me. Shakspeare.
 6. The slough; the cast off skin of a serpent.
 Snakes, the rather for the casting of their skin, live till they be old. Bacon.
SPOILER. n. f. [from spoil.]
 1. A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.
 Such ruin of her manners Rome Hath suffer'd now, as she's become Both her own spoiler and own prey. Ben Jon.
 Providence, where it loves a nation, concern self to own and assert the interest of religion, by blasting the spoilers of religious persons and places. Net.
 Come you then here, thus far, thro' waves, to conquer,
 To waste, to plunder, out of mere compassion?
 Is it humanity that prompts you on?
 Happy for us, and happy for you spoilers,
 Had your humanity ne'er reach'd our world! A Pope.
 2. One who mars or corrupts any thing.
SPOILFUL. adj. [spoil and full.] Wasteful; rapacious.
 Having oft in battle vanquish'd
 Thro' spoilful Picts, and swarming Federles, Long time in peace his realm established. Farquhar.
SPOKE. n. f. [spaca, Sax. speiche, German.] The bar of a wheel that passes from the nave to the felly.
 All you gods,
 In general synod take away her power;
 Break all the spokes and felines of her wheel,
 And bow the round nave down the hill of heav'n. Shakspeare.
 No heir e'er drove so fine a coach,
 The spokes, we are by Ovid told,
 Were silver, and the axle gold. Sa.
SPOKE. The preterit of speake.
 They spoke best in the glory of their conquest.
SPOKEN. The participle passive of speake.
 Would'st thou be spoken for to the king? Bay.
 The original of these signs for commemoration found in the rock, in spoken language. H.
SPOKESMAN. n. f. [spoke and man.] One who speaks for another.
 'Tis you that have the reason.
 To do what?
 —To be a spokesman from madam Silvia. Shakspeare.
 He shall be thy spokesman unto the people. H.
To SPOLIATE. v. a. [spolio, Lat.] To rob; to plunder.
SPOLIATION. n. f. [spoliation, Fr. spolie-tio, Lat.] The act of robbery or pila-tion.
 An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void jure & facto, and sometimes de facto, and not jure; as when a man suffers a spoliation by his act. Bay.
SPO'NDIL. n. f. [spondil, Fr. *q. adven-
 Lat.*] A foot of two long syllables.
 We see in the choice of the words the work of the tongue and the striving to keep it open in them: Homer clogs the verse with spondils, and leaves the vowels open. Bay.
SPO'NDYL. n. f. [σπονδυλος, spōndyl,
 Fr. spondylus, Lat.] A vertebra;
 a joint of the spine.
 It hath for the spine or back-bone a cartilage of substance, without any spondil: its processions are tubercles. Bay.
SPONGE. n. f. [spongia, Lat.] A soft porous substance, supposed by some to be the mud of animals. It is remarkable for making up water. It is too often written sponge. See SPONGE.

Sponges are gathered from the sides of rocks,
being as a large but tough moss.
They opened and washed part of their sponges.
Saunders.

Great officers are like sponges: they suck till they are full, and, when they come once to be squeezed, their very heart's blood comes away.
Lyftranger

To SPONGE. - v. a. [from the noun.] To blot; to wipe away as with a sponge.

Except between the words of translation and the mind of scripture itself there be contradiction, very little difference should not seem an intolerable blemish necessarily to be sponged out.
Hooker

To SPONGE. - v. n. To suck in as a sponge;
to gain by mean arts.

The ant lives upon her own, honestly gotten;
whereas the fly is an intruder, and a common fool-leech, that sponges upon other people's treasures.
Lyftranger

Here went the dean, when he's to seek,
To sponge a breakfast once a week.
Saunders

SPONGER. - n. f. [from sponge.] One who hangs for a maintenance on others.

A generous rich man, that kept a splendid and open table, would try which were friends, and which only trencher-flies and spongers.
Lyftranger

SPONGINESS. - n. f. [from spongy.] Softness, and fulness of cavities, like a sponge.

The lungs are exposed to receive all the droppings from the brain: a very fit cistern, because of their spongy texture.
Harvey

SPONGIOUS. - adj. [spongius, Fr. from sponge.] Full of small cavities like a sponge.

All thick bones are hollow or spongius, and contain an oblongous substance in little vesicles, which by the heat of the body is exhaled through these bones to supply their fibres.
Cheyne

SPONGY. - adj. [from sponge.]

1. Soft and full of small interstitial holes.
The lungs are the most spongy part of the body,
and therefore able to contract and dilate itself.
Bacon

A spongy excrecence groweth upon the roots of the larch-tree, and upon cedar, very white, light, and friable, called agarick.
Bacon

The body of the tree being very spongy within, though hard without, they easily contrive into cannels.
Mor

Into earth's spongy veins the ocean sinks,
Those rivers to replenish which he drinks.
Denham

Return, unhappy swain!
The spongy clouds are fill'd with gathering rain.
Druden

Her bones are all very spongy, and more remarkably those of a wild bird, which flies much, and long together.
Greaves

2. Wet; drenched; soaked; full like a sponge.

When their drench'd natures lie as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
Th' unguarded Duncan? What not put upon
His spongy officers, who shall bear the guilt?
Shakespeare

SPONK. - n. f. [a word in Edinburgh which denotes a match, or any thing dipt in sulphur that takes fire: as, any sponks will ye buy?] Touchwood.

SPONSAL. - adj. [sponsalis, Lat.] Relating to marriage.

SPONSION. - n. f. [sponsio, Lat.] The act of becoming surety for another.

SPONSOR. - n. f. [Lat.] A surety; one who makes a promise or gives security for another.

In the baptism of a male there ought to be two males and one woman, and in the baptism of a female child two women and one man; and these are
Vol. II.

called sponsors or godfathers; and education in the true christian faith.

The sponsor ought to be of the same station with the person to whom he becomes surety.
The rash hermit, who with impious prayer
Had been the sponsor of another's care.
Harte

SPONTANEITY. - n. f. [spontaneitas, school
Lat. spontaneus, Fr. from spontaneous.] Voluntariness; willingness; accord un-compelled.

Necessity and spontaneity may sometimes meet together, so may spontaneity and liberty; but real necessity and true liberty can never.
Strict necessity they simple call;
It binds the will, that things foreknown
By spontaneity, not choice, are done.
Dryden

SPONTANEOUS. - adj. [spontaneus, Fr. from sponte, Lat.] Voluntary; not compelled; acting without compulsion or restraint; acting of itself; acting of its own accord.

Many unalloyed motions in animals, though I cannot call them voluntary, yet I use them spontaneous. I have reason to conclude, that these are not simply mechanical.
Hale

They now came forth
Spontaneous; for within their spirit mov'd Attendant on their lord.
Milton

While John for mine pins does declare,
And Roger loves to pitch the bar,
Both legs and arms spontaneous move,
Which was the thing I meant to prove.
Prior

Begin with tenets, of every art the foul,
Parts answering parts shall slide into a whole;
Spontaneous beauties all around advance,
Start ev'n from difficulty, strike from chance;
Nature shall join you, time shall make it grow.
Pope

SPONTANEOUSLY. - adv. [from spontaneous.]
Voluntarily; of its own accord.

This would be as impossible as that the lead of an edifice should naturally and spontaneously mount up to the roof, while lighter materials employ themselves beneath it.
Bentley

When torus spontaneously acid, and the curd into cheese as hard as a stone.
Arbuthnot

SPONTANEOUSNESS. - n. f. [from spontaneous.] Voluntariness; freedom of will;
accord unforced.

The faculties and instincts of brutes, the sponta-neousness of many of their animal motions, are not explicable, without supposing some active determinate power connected to and inherent in their spirits, of a higher extraction than the bare natural modification of matter.
Hale

SPOOL. - n. f. [puhl, German; spohl, Dutch.] A small piece of cane or reed, with a knot at each end; or a piece of wood turned in that form to wind yarn upon; a quill.

To SPOOL. - v. n. [probably from spume, or foam, as a ship driven with violence spumes, or raises a foam.] To go on swiftly. A sea term.

When virtue spooms before a prosperous gale,
My heaving wishes help to fill the sail.
Dryden
SPOON. - n. f. [spoon, Dutch; spone, Danish; spoonn, Islandick.] A concave vessel with a handle, used in eating liquids.

Wouldst thou down thyself,
Put but a little water in a spoon,
And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stifle such a villain up.
Shakespeare
This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him; I have no long spoon.
Or'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon,
Count the slow clock, and dine exact at noon.
Pope

To SPOON. - v. n. In sea language, is when a ship, being under sail in a storm, cannot bear it, but is obliged to put rig before the wind.
Bailey

SPOONBILL. - n. f. [spoon and bill; podiceps, Lat.] A bird.

The shoveller, or spoonbill; the former name the more proper, the end of the bill being broad like a shovel, but not concave like a spoon, but perfectly flat.
Grew

Ducks and geese have such long broad bills to quaffer in water and mud, to which we may recon the bill of the spoonbill.
Derham

SPOONFUL. - n. f. [spoon and full.]

1. As much as is generally taken at once in a spoon. A medical spoonful is half an ounce.

Preferbe him, before he do use the receipt, that he take such a pill, or a spoonful of liquor.
Bacon

2. Any small quantity of liquid.

Surely the choice and mixture of the materials of which the whole body is composed, and what we take daily by pounds, is at least of as much importance as of what we take seldom, and only by grains and spoonfuls.
Arbuthnot

SPOONMEAT. - n. f. [spoon and meat.]
Liquid food; nourishment taken with a spoon.

We prescribed a slender diet, allowing only spoonmeats.
Weyman

Wretched
Are mortals born to sleep their lives away!
Go back to what thy infancy began;
Eat pap and spoonmeat; for thy gurgles cry.
Dryden

Be fullen, and retort the lullaby,
Diet most upon spoonmeats, as veal or cock broth.
Harvey

SPOONWORM. - n. f. Scurvygrass.

Spoonworm was there, scorbutic to supply;
And centauries, to clear the jaundic'd eye.
Harte

SPORADICAL. - adj. [sporadicus; spora-dique, French.]

A sporadic disease is an endemic disease, what in a particular season affects but few people.
Arbuthnot

SPORT. - n. f. [spott, a make-game, Islandick.]

1. Play; diversion; game; frolick and tumultuous merriment.

Her spots were such as carried riches of knowledge upon the stream of delight.
As flow to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They fill us for their spot.
Shakespeare

When their hearts were merry, they said, I call for Simon, that he may make us spot; and they called for him, and he made them spot.
As a mad-man who casteth firebrands, arrows,
and death, so is the man that deceiveth his neighbour, and hath, and not in spot?
Piercy

The discourse of fools is unknown, and their spot is in the wantonness of sin.
Leclerc

2. Mock; contemptuous mirth.

It I suspect without cause, why then make spot
at me, then let me be your jest.
They had his messengers in derision, and made a spot of his prophets.
Shakespeare

To make spot with his word, and to endeavour to render it ridiculous, by turning that holy book into gallery, is a direct affront to God.
Tillotson

3. That with which one plays.

Each on his rock transia'd, the spot and prey
Of wrecking whirlwinds.
Milton

Commit not thy prophetic mind
To sitting leaves, the spot of every wind,
Let thy disperse in air.
Dryden

Some grave their wings on marble; spot more just.

Stoop'd down serene, and wrote them on the dust,
Trod under foot, the spot of every wind,
Sweet from the earth, and blotted from his mind;
There secret in the grave he bade them lie,
And griev'd they could not 'scape th' Almighty's eye.
Dr. Bladen on Dr. Butler

4. Play; idle gingle.

An author who should introduce such a spot of words upon our stage, would meet with small applause.
Brown

5. Diversion of the field, as of fowling, hunting, fishing.

*New forsook mountain sport, up to yon hill,
Your legs are young.* Shakespeare.
The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, and the sports of the field, had a great desire to make a great park, for red as well as fallow deer, between Richmond and Hampton Court. Clarendon.

To SPORT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divert; to make merry. It is used only with the reciprocal pronoun.

The poor man wept and bled, cried and prayed, while they sported themselves in his pain, and delighted in his prayers, as the argument of their victory. Sidney.

Away with him, and let her sport herself
With that she's big with. Shakespeare.
Against whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? W'ib.

What pretty stories these are for a man of his seriousness to sport himself withal! Atterbury.

Let such writers go on at their dearest peril, and sport themselves, in their own deceivings. Watts.

2. To represent by any kind of play.

Now sporting on thy lyre the love of youth,
Now virtuous age and venerable truth;
Expressing justly Sappho's wanton art
Of odes, and Pindar's more majestic part. Dryden.

To SPORT. v. n.

1. To play; to frolic; to game; to wanton.

They, sporting with quick glance,
Shew to the sun their wav'd coats dropt with gold. Milton.

Luriss, as she sported at this play, was drowned
In the river Peneus. Broome.

2. To trifle.

If any man turn religion into raillery, by hold Jests, he renders himself ridiculous, because he sports with his own life. Tillotson.

SPORTFUL. adj. [from sport and full.]

1. Merry; frolic; wanton; acting in jest.

How with a sportful malice it was follow'd,
May rather pluck on laughter than revenge. Shakespeare.

Down he alights among the sportful herd
Of those four-footed kinds. Milton.

2. Ludicrous; done in jest.

His highness, even in such a slight and sportful Damage, had a noble sense of just dealing. Wotton.
Behold your own Alcianus, while he tard,
He drew his glittering helmet from his head,
In which the youth to sportful arms he led. Dryden.

They are no sportful productions of the soil, but did once belong to real and living fishes; seeing each of them doth exactly resemble some other shell on the sea-shore. Boottley.

A catalogue of this may be had in Albericus Gentilis; which, because it is too sportful, I forbear to mention. Baker.

SPORTFULLY. adv. [from sportful.] Wantonly; merrily.

SPORTFULNESS. n. f. [from sportful.] Wantonness; play; merriment; frolic.

The otter got out of the river, and inwaded himself so, as the ladies lost the further marking of his sportfulness. Sidney.

SPORTIVE. adj. [from sport.] Gay; merry; frolic; wanton; playful; ludicrous.

I am not in a sportive humour now;
Tell me, and dally not, where is the money? Shakespeare.

Is it I
That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
Of snaky muskets? Shakespeare.

While thus the constant pair alternate snail Joyful above them and around them play'd 11

Angels and sportive loves, a numerous crowd,
Smiling they clapt their wings, and low they bow'd. Prior.

We must not hope wholly to change their original tempers; nor make the gay pensive and grave, nor the melancholy sportive, without spoiling them. Locke.

No wonder savages or subjects slain,
Were equal crimes in a despotick reign;
Both doom'd alike for sportive tyrants bled,
But subjects starv'd while savages were fed. Pope.

SPORTIVENESS. n. f. [from sportive.] Gayety; play; wantonness.

Shall I conclude her to be simple, that has her time to begin, or refuse sportiveness as freely as I have? Walton.

SPORTSMAN. n. f. [sport and man.] One who pursues the recreations of the field.

Mamius lets us know the pagan hunters had Melenger for their patron, as the christians have their St. Hubert: he speaks of the constellation which makes a good sportsman. Addison.

SPORTULE. n. f. [sportule, Fr. sportula, Lat.] An alms; a dole.

The bishops, who consecrated the ground, had a full or sportule from the credulous laity. Ayliffe.

SPOT. n. f. [spotte, Danish; spotte, Flemish.]

1. A blot; a mark made by discoloration.

This three years day, these eyes, though clear
To outward view of blemish or of spot,
Beret of sight, their seeing have forgot. Milton.

A long series of ancestors shews the native lustre with advantage, but if he any way degenerate from his line, the least spot is visible on ermine. Dryden.

2. A taint; a disgrace; a reproach; a fault.

Yet Chloe sure was form'd without a spot;
'Tis true, but something in her was forgot. Pope.

3. I know not well the meaning of spot in this place, unless it be a scandalous woman, a disgrace to her sex.

Let him take thee,
And hoist thee up to th' shouting plebeians;
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex. Shakespeare.

4. A small extent of place.

That spot to which I point is paradise,
Adam's abode; those lusty shades, his bow'r. Milton.

He who, with Plato, shall place beatitude in the knowledge of God, will have his thoughts raised to other contemplations than those who looked not beyond this spot of earth, and those perishing things in it. Locke.

About one of these breathing passages is a spot of myrtles, that flourish within the steam of these vapours. Addison.

Abdallah converted the whole mountain into a kind of garden, and covered every part of it with plantations or spots of flowers. Guardian.

He that could make two ears of corn grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before, would deserve better of mankind than the whole race of politicians. Swift.

5. Any particular place.

I would be busy in the world, and learn;
Not, like a coarse and useless dunghill weed,
Fix'd to one spot, and rot just as I grow. Otway.

As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell,
So the my prey becomes ev'n here. Dryden.

Here Adrian fell: upon that fatal spot
Our brother died. Granville.

The Dutch landscapes are, I think, always a representation of an individual spot, and each in its kind a very faithful, but very confined, portrait. Reynolds.

6. Upon the SPOT. Immediately; without changing place. [Sur le champ.]

The lion did not chop him up immediately upon the spot; and yet he was resolv'd he should not escape. L'Estrange.

It was determined upon the spot, according to the oratory on either side prevailed. Swift.

To SPOT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mark with discolorations; to maculate.

They are polluted off'rings, more abhor'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice. Shakespeare.

Have you not seen a handkerchief,
Spotted with strawberries, in your wife's hand? Shakespeare.

But serpents now more amity maintain;
From spotted skins the leopard does refrain,
No weaker lion's by a stronger skin. Tate.

2. To patch by way of ornament.
I counted the patches on both sides, and found the tory patches to be about twenty stronger than the whig; but next morning the whole poppet-show was filled with faces spotted after the whigish manner. Spectator.

3. To corrupt; to disgrace; to taint.

This vow receive, this vow of God maintain,
My virgin life no spotted thoughts shall stain. Sidney.

The people of Armenia have retained the christian faith from the time of the apostles, but at this day it is spotted with many absurdities. Abbe.

SPOTLESS. adj. [from spot.]

1. Free from spots.

2. Free from reproach or impurity; immaculate; pure; untainted.

So much fairer
And spotless shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth. Shakespeare.

I date my life lay down, that the queen is spotless
In th' eyes of Heaven. Shakespeare.

You grac'd the several parts of life,
A spotless virgin, and a faultless wife. Waller.

We sometimes wish that it had been our lot to live and converse with Christ, to hear his divine discourses, and to observe his spotless behaviour; and we please ourselves perhaps with thinking, how ready a reception we should have given to him and his doctrine. Atterbury.

Eternal sunshine of the spotless mind,
Each pray'r accepted, and each wish resign'd. Pope.

SPOTTER. n. f. [from spot.] One that spots; one that maculates.

SPOTTY. adj. [from spot.] Full of spots; maculated.

The moon, whose orb
Through optick glass the Turk an artful views
In Valamoras to defery new lands, Rivers, or mountains, on her spotted globe. Milton.

SPOUSAL. adj. [from spouse.] Nuptial; matrimonial; conjugal; connubial; bridal.

There shall we consummate our spousal rites. Shakespeare.

Hope's chaste kiss wrongs no more joy's muddy head,
Than spousal rites prejudice the marriage bed. Crahaue.

This other, in her prime of love,
Spousal embraces vitated with gold. Milton.

Sleep'st thou, careless of the nuptial day?
Thy spousal ornament neglected lies;
Arise, prepare the bridal train, arise. Pope.

SPOUSAL. n. f. [epousalles, Fr. sponsalia Lat.] Marriage; nuptials.

As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal,
That never may ill office, or fell jealousy,
Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,
To make divorce of them incorporate league. Shakespeare.

The amorous bird of night
Sung spousal, and bid haste the evening star,
On his hill top to light the bridal lamp. Milton.

The spousals of Hippolyta the queen,
What tilts and tournaments at the feast were seen! Dryden.

Ethereal music did her death prepare,
Like joyful sounds of spousals in the air;
A radiant light did her crown'd temples gild. Dryden.

S P O

SPOUSE, n. f. [sponsus, sponsa, Latin; sponse, French.] One joined in marriage; a husband or wife.

She is of good esteem;
Belide, so qualified as may become
The sponse of any noble gentleman. Shakespeare.
At once, farewell, O faithful sponse they said;
At once th' encroaching rinds their closing lips invade. Dryden.

SPOUSE, adj. [from the noun.] Wedded; espoused; joined together as in matrimony.

They led the vine
To wed her elm; she sponse'd about him twines
The marriageable arms. Milton.

SPOUSELESS, adj. [from sponse.] Wanting a husband or wife.

To tempt the sponseless queen with am'rous wiles,
Rebels the nobles from the neighb'ring isles. Pope.

SPOUT, n. f. [from spuyt, Dutch.]

1. A pipe, or mouth of a pipe or vessel, out of which any thing is poured.
She gushing to begin some speech, her eyes Became two spouts. Shakespeare.
In whales that breathe, it is the water should get into the lungs, an ejection thereof is contrived by a spout at the head. Brown.

If you chance it to lack,
Be it claret or sack,
I'll make this spout
To deal it about,
Or this to run out,
As it were from a spout. Ben Jonson.
As waters did in storms, now pitch run out,
As lead, when a fir'd church becomes one spout. Donne.

In Gaza they couch vessels of earth in their walls, to gather the wind from the top, and to pass it down in spouts into rooms. Bacon.
Let the water be fed by some higher than the pool, and delivered into it by fan spouts, and then discharged by some equality of bores, that it stay little. Bacon.

In this single cathedral, the very spouts are loaded with ornaments. Addison.
From silver spouts the grateful liquors glide,
And China's earth receives the smoking tide. Pope.
2. Water falling in a body; a cataract, such as is seen in the hot climates, when clouds sometimes discharge all their water at once.

Not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricane call,
Confring'd in mists by the almighty son,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword Falling on Diomedes. Shakespeare.

The force of their motions pressing more in some places than in others, there would fall hot showers, but great spouts or cascades of water. Huot.

TO SPOUT, v. a. [from the noun.] To pour with violence, or in a collected body, as from a spout.

We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which bore we came to spout against your town. Shakespeare.

I intend two fountains, the one that sprinkles or spouteth water, the other a fair receipt of water.

She swims in blood, and blood does spouting throw
To heav'n, that heav'n's such a cruelties might know. Wallar.

Next on his belly floats the mighty whale;
He twists his back, and rears his threat'ning tail.
He spouts the tide. Creech.

TO SPOUT, v. n. To issue as from a spout.
They laid them down hard by the murmuring musk of certain waters, which spouted out of the side of the hills. Widney.

No hands could force it thence, so fix'd it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting blood. Dryden.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at the tops of them, upon the face of the ground.

Woodward.

All the glittering hill
Is bright with spouting trails.

SPRAG, adj. Vigorous; sprightly. A provincial word.

A good sprag memory. Shakespeare.

TO SPRAIN, v. a. [corrupted from strain.]
To stretch the ligaments of a joint without dislocation of the bone.

Should the big last extend the shoe too wide,
The sudden turn may stretch the swelling vein,
Thy cracking joint unhinge, or ankle sprain. Gay.

SPRAIN, n. f. [from the verb.] Extension of the ligaments without dislocation of the joint.

I was in pain, and thought it was with some spain at tennis. Temple.

SPRAINTS, n. f. The dung of an otter.

SPRANG, The preterit of spring.

Mankind spring from one common original, whence this tradition would be universally disfused. Tillotson.

SPRAT, n. f. [sprot, Dutch; sarda, Lat.]
A small sea fish.

So oft, in feasts with costly changes clad,
To crammed maws a sprat new stomach brags. Sidney.

All fowls do lay for porke and fowle,
For spouts and spurlings for their house. Tusser.
Of roundish there are but, spat, barn, finch.

TO SPRAWL, v. n. [spradde, Danish; spartelen, Dutch.]

1. To struggle, as in the convulsions of death.
Hang the child, that he may see it sprawl;
A sight to vex the father's soul. Shakespeare.

Some lie sprawling on the ground,
With many a gash and bloody wound. Hudibras.

2. To tumble or creep with much agitation and contortion of the limbs.

The birds were not fledged; but, upon sprawling and struggling to get clear of the flame, down they tumbled. L'Estrange.

Telamon hap'd to meet
A rising root that held his fallen'd feet;
So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryden.

Hence, long before the child can crawl,
He learns to kick, and wince, and sprawl. Prior.
Did the fiars do this feat once only, which gave beginning to humap race? who were there then in the world, to observe the births of those full men, and calculate their nativities, as they sprawled out of ditches? Bentley.

He ran, he leapt into a flood,
There spawled a while, and scarce got out,
All cover'd o'er with slime. Swift.

SPRAY, n. f. [of the same race with spout and spout.]

1. The extremity of a branch.

At sight whereof each bird that sits on spray,
And every beak that to his den was fled,
Came forth afresh out of their late dismay,
And to the light lit up their drooping head. Hubbard's Tale.

This droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays,
That Libanor's pride does in her younger days. Shakespeare.

The wind that whistles through the sprays
Maintains the comfort of the lung;
And hidden birds, with native lugs,
The golden sleep prolong. Dryden.

2. The foam of the sea, commonly written spry.

Winds raise some of the salt with the sprom. Arbutnot.

They, when departed, spread abroad his fame in all that country. Matthew.

6. To emit as effluvia or emanations; to diffuse.

Their course thro' thickest constellations held,
They spread their bane. Milton.

TO SPREAD, v. n. To extend or expand itself.

Can any understand the spreadings of the clouds, or the noise of his tabernacle? Job.

The princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension only of their spreading and ambitious designs. Bacon.
Plants, if they spread much, are seldom tall. Bacon.

Great Pan, who wont to chase the fair,
And lov'd the spreading oak, was there. Addison.

The valley opened at the farther end, spreading forth into an immense ocean. Addison.

SPREAD, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Extent; compass.
I have got a fine spread of improvable lands;
and am already ploughing up some, fencing others. Addison.

2. Expansion of parts.
No flower hath that spread of the woodbind. Bacon.

SPREYER, n. f. [from spread.]

1. One that spreads.
By confounding ourselves, we should be spreaders of a worse infection than any we are likely to draw from papists, by our conformity with them in ceremonies. Hooker.

2. Publisher; divulger; disseminator.
If it be a mistake, I desire I may not be accused for a spreader of false news. Swift.

SPRINT, part. [from sprence, to sprinkle;
sprengean, spnenan, Saxon; sprengean, Dutch.] Sprinkled. Obsolete.

O lips, that kiss'd that hand with my tears sprint. Sidney.

SPRING, n. f. [spring, Welsh; so Davies;
but it is probably of the same race with spring.] A small branch; a spray.

The substance is true ivy; after it is taken down, the friends of the family are desirous to have some spring to keep. Bacon.

Our chilling climate hardly bears
A spring of days in fifty years;
While every fool his claim alleges,
As it grew in common hedges. Swift.

SPRING, Chrysal, n. f.

In perpendicular fissures, chrysalis is found in form of a hexangular column, adhering at one end to the stone, and near the other springing gradually, till it terminates in a point: this is called by lapidaries spring or rock chrysal. Woodward.

SPRACED. adj. [from spring.] Full of small branches.

SPRIGHT. n. s. [contraction of spirit; spiritus, Latin. It was anciently written sprete or spryte; and spirit, as now written, was long considered in verse as a monosyllable: this word should therefore be spelled sprite, and its derivatives spriately, spriately; but custom has determined otherwise.]

1. Spirit; shade; soul; incorporeal agent.

She doth display
The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words to wit do make their way,

To bear the message of her spriests. Spenser.

Earth he called out of deep darkness dread

Legions of spriests, the which, like little flies

Platt'ring about his ever damned head,

Await where to their service he applies. F. Que. n.

While with heav'nly clarity he spoke,

A screaming blaze the silent shadows broke;

The birds obscene to forests wung'd their flight,

And gaping graves receiv'd the guilty spriest. Dryden.

2. Walking spirit; apparition.

The ideas of goblins and spriests have no more to do with darkness than light; yet let but a foolish soul inculcate these often on the mind of a child, possibly he shall never be able to separate them again. Locke.

3. Power which gives cheerfulness or courage.

O chastity! the chief of heav'nly lights,
Which mak'st us most immortal shape to wear,

Hold thou my heart, establish thou my spriests;

To only thee my constant course I bear,

Till spotless soul unto thy bosom fly;

Such life to lead, such death I vow to die. Sidney.

4. An arrow. Not in use.

We had in use for sea fight short arrows called spriests, without any other heads save wood sharpened; which were discharged out of muskets, and would pierce through the sides of ships where a bullet would not. Bacon.

TO SPRIGHT. v. a. To haunt as a spriest.

A ludicrous use.

I am spriest with a fool. Shakespeare.

SPRIGHTFUL. adj. [spriest and full.]

The spirit of the time shall teach me speed —

— Spoke like a spriest noble gentleman. Shakespeare.

Steeds spriest as the light. Coates.

Happy my eyes when they behold thy face —

My heavy heart will leave its dismal beating

At sight of thee, and bound with spriest joys. Otway.

SPRIGHTFULLY. adv. [from spriest and full.]

Briskly; vigorously.

Norfolk, *spriest*ly and bold,

Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet. Shakespeare.

SPRIGHTLESS. adj. [from spriest.] Dull;

enervated; sluggish.

Are you grown

Benumb'd with fear, or virtue's spriest cold? Colley.

SPRIGHTLINESS. n. s. [from spriest and full.]

Liveliness; briskness; vigour; gayety;

vivacity.

The soul is clogged when she acts in conjunction with a companion to heavy; but, in dreams, observe with what a spriest and alacrity does she exert herself. Addison.

SPRIGHTLY. adj. [from spriest.] Gay;

brisk; lively; vigorous; any; vivacious.

Produce the wine that makes us bold,

And *spriest*ly wit and love inspires. Dryden.

When now the spriest trumpet, from afar,

Had giv'n the signal of approaching war. Dryden.

Each morn they wak'd me with a spriest lay:

Of opening heav'n they sung, and gladsome day. Prior.

The *spriest*ly Sylvia trips along the green;

She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen. Pope.

TO SPRING. v. n. pret. spring or spring; anciently spring; part. spring. [springan, Saxon; springen, Dutch.]

1. To arise out of the ground, and grow, by vegetative power.

All ye publish'd virtues of the earth,

Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate

In the good man's distress. Shakespeare.

To his musick plants and flowers

Ever spring, as inn and flowers

There had made a lasting spring. Shakespeare.

To satisfy the desolate ground, and cause the bed of the tender herb to spring forth. Job.

Other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that spring up and increased. Mark.

Tell me, in what happy fields

The thistle spring, to which the lily yields? Pope.

2. To begin to grow.

That the nipples should be made with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk when drawn, otherwise to retain it; and the teeth of the young not spring, are effects of providence. Ray.

3. To proceed as from seed.

Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves; and in the second year that which

*spring*eth of the same. 2 Kings.

Much more good of sin shall spring. Milton.

4. To come into existence; to issue forth.

Hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,

Giving up ground unto the house of York,

They never thia had spring like summer flies. Shakespeare.

Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it perit, Pope.

And each warm with spring mutual from the heart.

5. To arise; to appear; to begin to appear or to exist.

When the day began to spring, they let her go. Judith.

To them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is spring up. Matthew.

Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away,

Taint not the pure beams of the spring day

With your dull influence: it is for you

To sit and frow upon night's heavy brow. Craik.

Do not blast my spring hopes,

Which thy kind hand has planted in my soul. Race.

6. To issue with effect or force.

Swift fly the years, and rise the expected morn!

Oh spring to light, auspicious babe, be born! Pope.

7. To proceed as from ancestors, or a country.

How youngly he began to serve his country,

In a long continued; and what stock he *spring*s of;

The noble house of Marcus. Shakespeare.

Our Lord *spring*ing out of Judea. Hebrews.

All these

Shall, like the brethren spring of dragon's teeth,

Rumour and other, and he fall amongst 'em. Johnson.

Heroes of old, by rapine and by spoil,

In search of fame did all the world embroil;

Thus to their gods each then allied his name,

This spring from Jove, and that from Titan came. Graville.

8. To proceed as from a ground, cause, or reason.

They found new hope to spring

Out of despair. Milton.

Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule or men, and property in things, spring from the same original, and descend

by the same rules. Lake.

9. To grow; to thrive.

What makes all this but Jupiter the king,

At whose command we perish and we spring?

Then 'tis our best, since thus ordain'd to die,

To make a virtue of necessity. Dryden.

10. To bound; to leap; to jump; to rush hastily; to appear suddenly.

Some strange commotion

Is in his brain; he bites his lip, and starts;

Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground;

Then lays his finger on his temple; straight

*spring*s out into full gait, then stops again. Shakespeare.

I spring not more in joy at first hearing he was a man child, than slow in first seeing he had proved himself a man. Shakespeare.

He called for a light, and spring in, and fell before Paul. Acts.

When heav'n was nam'd, they lov'd their land

again; Dryden.

Then spring the forth, they follow'd her amon.

Afraid to sleep,

Her blood all terv'd, with a furious leap

She spring from bed. Dryden.

Nor lies she long; but, as her fates ordain,

*Spring*s up to life; and, fresh to second pain,

Is lay'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

See, aw'd by heav'n, the blooming Hebrews

Her artful tongue, and more persuasive eyes;

Aud, *spring*ing from her disappointed arms,

Prefers a dunce on to forbidden charms. Blackmore.

The mountain flag that *spring*s

From height to height, and bounds along the plain,

Nor has a master to restrain his course,

That mountain flag would Vauou rather be

Than be a slave. Philips.

11. To fly with elastic power; to start.

A link of horsehair, that will easily slip, turns to the end of the stick that *spring*s. Montmorency.

12. To rise from a covert.

My doors are hateful to my eyes,

Fill'd and dam'd up with gaping creditors,

Watchful as towers when their game will spring. Oliver.

A covey of partridges *spring*ing in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison.

13. To issue from a fountain.

Israel's servants digg'd in the valley, and found a well of *spring*ing water. Genesis.

Let the wide world his praises sing,

Where Tagus and Euphrates spring;

And from the Danube's frothy banks to those

Where from an unknown head great Nilus flows. Rowe.

14. To proceed as from a source.

'Tis true from force the noblest title *spring*s,

I therefore hold from that which first made kings. Dryden.

15. To shoot; to issue with speed and violence.

Then shook the sacred spring, and sudden light

Spring thro' the vaulted roof, and made the temple bright. Page.

The pow'r behold! the pow'r in glory done,

By her bent bow and her keen arrows known. Dryden.

The friendly gods a *spring*ing gale enlarg'd;

The fleet swift tiding o'er the larger flow,

Till Grecian clouds appear'd. Page.

TO SPRING. v. a.

1. To start; to rouse game.

Thus I reclaim'd my bozzard love to fly

At what, and when, and how, and where I choi'd;

Now negligent of sport I lie;

And now, as other lawbreakers use,

I spring a mistress, swear, write, sigh, and die;

And the game kill'd, or lost, go talk or lie. Dum.

That spring the game you were to let,

Before you'd time to draw the net. Hudibras.

A large cock pheasant he spring in one of the neighbouring woods. Spectator.

Here I use a great deal of diligence before I can spring any thing; whereas in town, whilst I am following one character, I am crossed by another, that they puzzle the chase. Addison.

See how the well-taught pointer leads the way!

The scent grows warm, he stops, he *spring*s the prey. Gay.

2. To produce quickly or unexpectedly.

The nurse, surpris'd with fright,

Starts up and leaves her bed, and *spring*s a light. Dryden.

Thus man by his own strength to heav'n would in soar,

And would not be oblig'd to God for more:

Vain, wretched creature, how art thou misled!

I to think thy wit these godlike notions bred!

These truths are not the product of thy mind;

But drop from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:

Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy light

And reason saw not, till faith *spring*s the light. Dryden.

He that has such springing seal, and spring such mighty discoveries, must needs be an admirable patriot. Collier.

3. To make by starting: applied to a ship. People discharge themselves of burdensome refections, as of the cargo of a ship that has spring a leak. L'Estrange.

No more accuse thy pen; but charge the crime On native sloth, and negligence of time: Beware the publick laughter of the town, Thou spring'st a leak already in thy crown. Dryden.
Whether the spring a leak, I cannot find, Or whether the was overset with wind, But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryden.

4. To discharge: applied to a mine. Our miners discovered several of the enemies mines, who have spring divers others which did little execution. Tatler.
Spring a mine, whereby the whole nest was overthrown. Addison.

5. To contrive on a sudden; to produce hastily; to offer unexpectedly. The friends to the cause spring a new project, and it was advertised that the crisis could not appear, till the ladies had shewn their zeal against the Pretender. Swift.

6. To pass by leaping. A barbarous use. Unbecoming skill To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed. Thomson.

7. Of the verb spring the primary sense is to grow out of the ground: so plants spring, thence spring the season; so water spring, thence spring a fountain. Plants rise unexpectedly, and waters break out violently; thence any thing done suddenly, or coming hastily, is said to spring; thence spring means an elastic body. Thus the active significations all import suddenness or force.

SPRING. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The season in which plants rise and vegetate; the vernal season. Orpheus with his lute made trees, And the mountain-tops that freeze;
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his musick plants and flowers Ever spring, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring. Shakspeare.
The spring visiteth not these quarters, so timely as the eastern parts. Curcio.
Come, gentle spring, ethereal mildness come, And from the bottom of yon dropping cloud Up on our plains descend. Thomson.

2. An elastic body; a body which, when distorted, has the power of restoring itself to its former state.

This may be performed by the strength of some such spring as is used in watches. the spring may be applied to one wheel, which shall give an equal motion to both the wheels. Wilkins.

The spring must be made of good steel, well tempered, and the wider the two ends of the spring stand asunder, the milder it throws the chape of the vice open. Moron.

He that was sharp-sighted enough to see the configuration of the minute particles of the spring of a clock, and upon what peculiar impulse its elastic motion depends, would no doubt discover something very admirable. Locke.

3. Elastic force. Here's, what a spring was in his arm, to throw! How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow! Dryden.

Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another: impenetrability makes them only stop. If two equal bodies meet directly in vacuo, they will by the laws of motion stop where they meet, lose their motion, and remain in rest; unless they be elastic, and receive new motion from their spring. Newton.

The soul is gathered within herself, and recovers that spring, which is weakened when she operates more in concert with the body. Addison.

In adult persons, when the fibres cannot any more yield, they must break, or lose their spring. Arbuthnot.

4. Any active power; any cause by which motion or action is produced or propagated. My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak, And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold, Like nature letting down the spring of life; So much the name of father awes me still. Dryden.

Nature is the same, and man is the same, has the same affections and passions, and the same *spring*s that give them motion. Ruymer.

Our author thus by vulgar *spring*s to move Pope. 5. A leap; a bound; a jump; a violent effort; a sudden struggle. The prisoner with a spring from prison broke; Then stretch'd his tattered'd tans with all his might, And to the neighbouring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose, And left the limbs still quivering on the ground! Addison.

6. A leap; a start of plank. Each petty hand Can steer a ship becalm'd; but he that will Govern, and carry her to her ends, must know His tides, his currents, how to shift his sails; Where her *spring*s are, her leaks, and how to stop 'em. Ben Jonson.

7. A fountain; an issue of water from the earth. Now stop thy *spring*s; my sea shall suck them dry, And swell so much the higher by their ebb. Shakspeare.
*Spring*s on the tops of hills pass through a great deal of pure earth, with less mixture of other waters. Bacon.

When in th' effects she doth the causes know, And seeing the stream, thinks where the spring doth rise; And 'er'ing the branch, conceives the root below; These things she views without the body's eyes. Davies.

He adds the running *spring*s and standing lakes, And bounding banks for winding rivers makes. Dryden.
Nile hears him knocking at his sixenfold gates, And looks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews fates. Dryden.

He bathed himself in cold spring water in the midst of winter. Locke.
The water that falls down from the clouds, sinking into beds of rock or clay, breaks out in *spring*s, commonly at the bottom of hilly ground. Larch.

8. A source; that by which any thing is supplied. To that great spring which doth great kingdoms move, The sacred spring whence right and honour streams, Diffusing virtue, shedding peace and love In every place, as Cynthia sheds her beams. Dryden.

I move, I see, I speak, disquiet, and I know; Though now I am, I was not always so: Then that from which I was such before, Whom, as my spring of being, I adore. Dryden.

Rolling down through so many barbarous ages, from the spring of Virgil, it bears along with it the filth of the Goths and Vandals. Dryden.

He has a secret spring of spiritual joy, and the continual feast of a good conscience within, that forbids him to be miserable. Bentley.

9. Rise; beginning. About the spring of the day, Samuel called Saul to the top of the house. 1 Samuel.

10. Cause; original. The season of the quicker or slower termination of this dilemma, arises from these three *spring*s. Blackmore.

The first *spring*s of great events, like those of great rivers, are often mean and little. Swift.

SPRING. } n. f. A youth. Obsolete. SPRINGAL. }

Before the bull the pictur'd winged love, With his young brother sport, light fluttering Upon the waves, as each had been a dove; The one his bow and shafts, the other spring. A burning tread about his head did move. As in their fire's new love both triumphing. Spenser.

SPRING. n. f. [from spring.] A gin; a noose which, fastened to any elastic body, catches by a spring or jerk. As a woodcock to my own spring, Ofrick, I'm justly kill'd with mine own treachery. Shakspeare.

Let goats for food their loads adders lend, But neither *spring*s, nets, nor snares employ. Dryden.
With many *spring*s we the birds betray, Slight lines of hair torquise the shany prey. Pope.

SPRINGER. n. f. [from spring.] One who routes game. SPRINGHALT. n. f. [spring and halt.] A lameness by which the horse twitches up his legs. They've all new legs, and lame ones: one would take it, That never saw them pace before, the spavin And springhalt reign'd among them. Shakspeare.

SPRINGINESS. n. f. [from springy.] Elasticity; power of restoring itself. Where there is a continued endeavour of the parts of a body to put themselves into another state, the progress may be much more slow; since it was a great while before the texture of the corpuscles of the fluid were so altered as to make them lose their former springiness. Boyle.

The air is a thin fluid body, endowed with elasticity and springiness, capable of condensation and rarefaction. Bentley.

SPRINGLE. n. f. [from spring.] A spring; an elastic noose. Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast, where every plain shooteth forth springles to take them. Carew.

To SPRINGLE. v. a. Misprinted, I suppose, for sprinkle. This is Timon's last, Who, flack and spangled with your flatteries, Withdrew off, and springles in your faces Your reeking villany. Shakspeare.

SPRINGTIDE. n. f. [spring and tide.] Tide at the new and full moon; high tide. Love, like springtides, full and high, Swells in every youthful vein; But each tide shows less supply, Till they quite shrink in again If a flow in age appear. Dryden.

'Tis but rain, and runs not clear. Many people die when the moon chiefly reigns; that is, in the night, or upon or near a springtide. Greaves.

SPRINGY. adj. [from spring.] 1. Elastic; having the power of restoring itself. Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame, Such as it is, to suit the vital flame, The blood, debarred of its nutritious food, Had cool'd and languish'd in the arterial road; While the first heat had flown, with frantic pain, To push the lazy tide along the coast. Blackmore.

This vast contraction and expansion forms unintelligible, by turning the particles of air to be springy and elastic, or rolled up like hoops, or by any other means than a repulsive power. Newton.

Though the bundle of fibres which constitute the muscles may be small, the fibres may be strong and springy. Arbuthnot.

If our air had not been a springy body, no animal could have exercised the very function of respiration; and yet the ends of respiration are not served by that springiness, but by some other unknown quality. Bentley.

2. [from spring.] Full of *spring*s or fountains. Not nled. Where the sandy or gravelly lands are springy or wet, rather maul them for grain than corn. Mortimer.

To SPRINKLE. v. a. [sprinkeln, Dutch.] 1. To scatter; to disperse in small masses. Take handfuls of ashes of the tunicate, and let Moses sprinkle it towards the heaven. Exodus.

2. To scatter in drops. Sprinkle waters of purifying upon them. Numbers.

SPRING. n. f. [from spring.] A gin; a noose which, fastened to any elastic body, catches by a spring or jerk. As a woodcock to my own spring, Ofrick, I'm justly kill'd with mine own treachery. Shakspeare.

Let goats for food their loads adders lend, But neither *spring*s, nets, nor snares employ. Dryden.
With many *spring*s we the birds betray, Slight lines of hair torquise the shany prey. Pope.

SPRINGER. n. f. [from spring.] One who routes game. SPRINGHALT. n. f. [spring and halt.] A lameness by which the horse twitches up his legs. They've all new legs, and lame ones: one would take it, That never saw them pace before, the spavin And springhalt reign'd among them. Shakspeare.

SPRINGINESS. n. f. [from springy.] Elasticity; power of restoring itself. Where there is a continued endeavour of the parts of a body to put themselves into another state, the progress may be much more slow; since it was a great while before the texture of the corpuscles of the fluid were so altered as to make them lose their former springiness. Boyle.

The air is a thin fluid body, endowed with elasticity and springiness, capable of condensation and rarefaction. Bentley.

SPRINGLE. n. f. [from spring.] A spring; an elastic noose. Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast, where every plain shooteth forth springles to take them. Carew.

To SPRINGLE. v. a. Misprinted, I suppose, for sprinkle. This is Timon's last, Who, flack and spangled with your flatteries, Withdrew off, and springles in your faces Your reeking villany. Shakspeare.

SPRINGTIDE. n. f. [spring and tide.] Tide at the new and full moon; high tide. Love, like springtides, full and high, Swells in every youthful vein; But each tide shows less supply, Till they quite shrink in again If a flow in age appear. Dryden.

'Tis but rain, and runs not clear. Many people die when the moon chiefly reigns; that is, in the night, or upon or near a springtide. Greaves.

SPRINGY. adj. [from spring.] 1. Elastic; having the power of restoring itself. Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame, Such as it is, to suit the vital flame, The blood, debarred of its nutritious food, Had cool'd and languish'd in the arterial road; While the first heat had flown, with frantic pain, To push the lazy tide along the coast. 3. To besprinkle; to wash, wet, or dust by scattering in small particles.
Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience. Hebrews.

Wings he wore
Of many a colour'd plume sprinkled with gold. Milton.

The prince, with living water sprinkled o'er
His limbs and body; then approach'd the door, Possess'd the porch. Dryden.

To SPRINKLE. v. n. To perform the act of scattering in small drops.
The priest shall sprinkle of the oil with his fingers. Leviticus.

Baptism may well enough be performed by sprinkling, or effusion of water. Aylmer.
When dext'rous damels twirl the sprinkling mop,
And cleanse the spatter'd faith, and scrub the stains, Know Saturday appears. Gay.

SPRINKLER. n. f. [from sprinkle.] One that sprinkles.

To SPRIT. v. a. [sprytan, Sax. spruyten, Dutch.] To throw out; to eject with force. Commonly sprit.

Toads sometimes exclude or sprit out a dark and liquid matter behind, and a venomous condition there may be perhaps therein; but it cannot be called their urine. Brown.

To SPRIT. v. n. To shoot; to germinate; to sprout. Used of barley wetted for malt.

SPRIT. n. f. [from the verb.] Shoot; sprout.

The barley, after it has been couched four days, will sweat a little, and shew the chit or sprit at the root-end of the corn. Mortimer.

SPRITSAIL. n. f. [sprit and sail.] The sail which belongs to the boltsprit mast. Dut.

Our men quitted themselves of the fireproof, by cutting the spritsail tackle off with their short hatchets. Wifeman.

SPRITE. n. f. [contracted from spirit.] A spirit; an incorporeal agent.

The sprites of fiery tergiversants in flame
Mount up, and take a salamander's name. Pope.
Of these am I who thy protection claim;
A watchful sprite, and Ariel is my name. Pope.

SPRITFULLY. adv. [See SPRIGHTFULLY.] Vigorously; with life and ardour.

The Grecian spritefully drew from the darts the corse.

And heard it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman.

SPRITELY. adv. [from sprite.] Gayly.
You have not seen young heifers, hilly kept,
Fill'd full of daisies at the field, and driven Home to their hovels, all so spritely given,
That no room can contain them. Chapman.

SPRONG. The old pret. of spring.

Not mistrusting, till these new curiosities sprung up, that ever any man would think our labour herein mispent, or the time wastefully consumed. Hooker.

To SPROUT. v. n. [sprytan, Saxon; spruyten, Dutch. Sprout, sprit, and by a very frequent transposition sprit or sput, are all the same word.]

1. To shoot by vegetation; to germinate.

The sprouting leaves that saw you here,
And call'd their fellows to the fight. Cowley.

Try whether these things in the sprouting do increase weight, by weighing them before they are hang'd up; and afterwards again, when they are sprouted. Bacon.

That leaf faded, but the young buds sprouted on, which afterwards opened into fair leaves. Bacon.

We find no security to prevent germination, having made trial of grams, whose ends, cut off, have not withstanding sprouted. Brown.

Old Baucis is by old Philemon seen Sprouting with sudden leaves of sprightly green. Dryden.
Hence sprouting plants enrich the plain and wood;
For physick fume, and some design'd for food. Blackmore.

Envi'd Britannia, sturdy as the oak
Which on her mountain top she proudly bears,
Eludes the ax, and sprouts against the stroke,
Strong from her wounds, and greater by her wars. Prior.

Rub malt between your hands to get the corn or sprouting clean away. Mortimer.

2. To shoot into ramifications.

Vitriol is apt to sprout with moisture. Bacon.

3. To grow.

Th' enl'ving daff its head begins to rear,
And on the ashes sprouting plumes appear. Tickel.

SPROUT. n. f. [from the verb.] A shoot of a vegetable.

Stumps of trees, lying out of the ground, will put forth sprouts for a time. Bacon.

Early, ere the odorous breath of morn
Awakes the slumbering leaves, or tuff'd horn Shakes the high thicket, hush! I all about,
Number my ranks, and visit every sprout. Milton.
To this kid, taken out of the womb, were brought in the tender sprouts of shrubs; and, after it had tasted, it began to eat of such as are the usual food of goats. Ray.

SPROUTS. n. f. pl. [from sprout.] Young coleworts.

SPRUCE. adj. [Skinner derives this word from sprout, French; but he proposes it with hesitation: Junius thinks it comes from sprout: Cajaubon trifles yet more contemptibly. I know not whence to deduce it, except from pruce. In ancient books we find furniture of pruce a thing costly and elegant, and thence probably came spruce.] Nice; trim; neat without elegance. It was anciently used of things with a serious meaning; it is now used only of persons, and with levity.

The tree
That wraps that chrysal in a wooden tomb,
Shall be took up spruce, fill'd with diamond. Donne.
Thou wilt not leave me in the middle street,
Tho' some more spruce companion thou dost meet. Donne.

Along the crisped shades and bow'rs
Revels the spruce and jocund spring;
The graces, and the rosy-bosom'd hours,
Thither all their bounties bring. Milton.

I must not slip into too spruce a style for serious matters; and yet I approve not that dull insipid way of writing practis'd by many chymists.

He put his hand and beard in order,
The sprucer to accost and board her. Hudibras.

He is to spruce, that he can never be genteel. Tatler.

This Tim makes a strange figure with that ragged coat under his livery: can't he go spruce and clean? Arbuthnot.

To SPRUCE. v. n. [from the adjective.]

To dress with affected neatness.

SPRUCE. n. f. A species of fir.

SPRUCEBEER. n. f. [from spruce, a kind of fir.] Beer tinctured with branches of fir.

Aloft the sprung, and steer'd to Thebes her flight. Pope.

Who sprung from kings shall know less joy than I will not easily bend. Pope.

SPRUNT. n. f. Anything that is short and SPUD. n. f. A short knife; any short thick thing, in contempt.

My love to Sheelah is more firmly fix'd
Than strongest weeds that grow these flowers betwixt,
My spud these nettles from the flowers can part,
No knife so keen to weed thee from my heart. Swift.

SPOOLERS of Yarn. n. f. [perhaps properly spoolers.] Are such as are employed to see that it be well spun, and fit for the loom. Dut.

SPUME. n. f. [spuma, Latin.] Foam; froth.

Materials dark and crude,
Of spirituous and fiery spume, till touch'd
With heaven's ray, and temper'd, they shoot forth
So beauteous, opening to the ambient light. Milton.

Waters frozen in pans, after their dissolution, leave a froth and spume upon them, which is caused by the airy part diffused, by the congelable mixture. Brown.

To SPUME. v. n. [spumo, Latin.] To foam; to froth.

SPUMOUS. } adj. [spumicus, Latin; from

SPUMY. } the noun.] Frothy; foamy.
The cause is the putrefaction of the body by natural heat: the putrifying parts suffer a largeness, and becoming airy and spumous, ascend into the surface of the water. Brown.

Not with more madness, rolling from afar,
The spumy waves proclaim the wat'ry war,
And mounting upwards with a mighty roar,
March onwards, and insult the rocky shore. Dryden.

The spumous and sordid state of the blood, in passing through the lungs, arises from its own elasticity, and its violent motion, the aerial particles expanding themselves. Arbuthnot.

SPUN. The pret. and part. pass. of spin.
The nymph nor spin, nor dress'd with artificial pride,
Her vest was gather'd up, her hair was tied. Addison.

SPUNGE. n. f. [spongia, Latin.] A sponge. See SPONGE.

When he needs what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, sponging, you shall be dry again. Shakespeare.

Considering the motion that was impress'd by the painter's hand upon the sponge, compounded with the specific gravity of the sponge, and the resistance of the air, the sponge did mechanically and unavoidably move in that particular line of motion. Newton.

To SPUNGE. v. n. [rather To sponge.]

To hang on others for maintenance.

This will maintain you, with the perquisite of sponging while you are young. Swift.

SPUNGINGHOUSE. n. f. [sponge and house.] A house to which debtors are taken before commitment to prison, where the bailiffs sponge upon them, or riot at their cost.

A bailiff kept you the whole evening in a sponginghouse. Swift.

SPUNGY. adj. [from sponge.]

1. Full of small holes, and soft like a sponge.

Some English wool, vex'd in a Belgian loom,
And into cloth of spungy texture made.

Did into France or colder Denmark roam,
To ruin with worse air our staple trade. Dryden.

2. Wet; moist; watery.

I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
From the spungy south to this part of the west,
There vanish'd in the sun-beams. Shakespeare.

3. Having the quality of imbibing.

There is a lady of more softer words,
More juicy to suck in the fangs of fears. Shaksp.
Rotten wood; touchwood.
See SPONK.

To make white powder, the best way is by the sunder of rotten willows: spunk, or touchwood prepared, might perhaps make it rustier. Brown.

PUR. n. f. [spuna, Saxon; spore, Danish, Icelandic, and Dutch; esperon, French.]

A sharp point fixed in the rider's heel, with which he pricks his horse to drive him forward.

He borrowing that homely armour for want of a better, had come upon the spur to redeem Philosophy's picture. Sidney.

Whether the body politick be
A horse whereon the governor doth ride,
And newly in the seat, that it may know
It can command it, lets it straight feel the spur.
Shaksp.

He presently set spurs to his horse, and departed with the rest of the company. Knolles.

Was I for this untitled Sir,
A girl with rusty sword and spur,
To live and honour to wage battle? Hudibras.

Incitement; incitation. It is used with to before the effect. Dryden has used it with of; but, if he speaks properly, he means to make the following word personal.

Scarcely then that nothing can move, unless there be some end, the desire whereof provoketh into action, how should that divine power of the soul, that part of our mind, ever stir itself into action,
unless it have also the like spur? Hooker.

What need we any spur, but our own cause,
To prick us to redress? Shaksp.

Hesitations are deep, and not vulgar; not made upon the spur of a particular occasion, but out of consideration of the future; to make his people more and more happy. Bacon.

Reward is the spur of virtue in all good arts, all valuable attempts, and emulation, which is the other spur, will never be wanting, when particular rewards are proposed. Dryden.

The chief, if not only, spur to human industry and action, is uneasiness. Locke.

The former may be a spur to the latter, till age takes him in love with the study, without any kindly bait. Chyco.

A stimulus; a prick; any thing that galls and teases.

Great and patience, rooted in him both,
Engle their spurs together. Shaksp.

The sharp points on the legs of a cock with which he fights.

Of birds the bill is of like matter with the teeth;
for their spur, it is but a nail. Bacon.

Animals have natural weapons to defend and kill, some talons, some claws, some spurs and teeth. Ray.

Any thing standing out; a snag.

The strong-bad's pronomenary for I made shake, and plucked up by the spurs
he pine and cedar. Shaksp.

SPUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

To prick with the spur; to drive with the spur.

My friend, who always takes care to cure his dear starting fire, spurred him up to the very edge of the coach. Addison.

Your father, when he mounted,
could 'em in strongly, and he spurred them hard.
Dryden.

Who would be at the trouble of learning, when his ignorance is carested? But when a brow-beat and man them, you make them en, for though they have no natural mettle; yet they are spurred and kicked, they will mend or pace. Collins.

To instigate; to incite; to urge forward.

Lovers break not hours,
Let it be to come before their time:
teach they spur their expedition. Shaksp.
Let the awe he has got upon their minds be so tempered with the marks of good-will, that affection may spur them to their duty. Locke.

3. To drive by force.

Love will not be spurred to what it loaths. Shaksp.

TO SPUR. v. n.

1. To travel with great expedition.
With backward bows the Parthians shall be there,
And, spurring from the fight, console their tear:
A double wreath shall crown our Caesar's brows.
Dryden.

2. To press forward.

Alcarnus took th' alarm, while yet he led,
And, spurring on, his equals soon o'erpaids. Dryden.
Some bold men, though they begin with minute ignorance and error, yet, by spurring on, refine themselves. Crow.

SPUR-GALLED. adj. [spur and gall.] Hurt with the spur.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bore a burthen like an ass,
Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jouncing Bohingbroke.
Shaksp.

What! shall each spur-gall'd hackney of the day,
Or each new-pretension'd tyophaunt, pretend
To break my windows, if I treat a friend? Pope.

SPURGE. n. f. [espurge, Fr. spurgie, Dut.
from purgo, Lat.] A plant violently purgative. Spurge is a general name in English for all milky purgative plants.
Skinner.

Every part of the plant abounds with a milky juice. There are seventy-one species of this plant, of which wartwort is one. Broad-leaved spurge is a biennial plant, and used in medicine under the name of cataputia minor. The milky juice in these plants is used by some to destroy warts, but particular care should be taken in the application, because it is a strong caustic. Miller.

That the leaves of cataputia, or spurge, being plucked upwards or downwards, perform their operations by purge or vomit, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants political operations. Brown.

SPURGE FLAX. n. f. [thymelaea, Lat.] A plant.

SPURGE LAUREL or MEZERCON. n. f. [chamaedaphne, Lat.] A plant.

SPURGE OLIVE. n. f. [chamaelea, Lat.] A shrub.

SPURGE WORT. n. f. [uphon, Lat.] A plant.

SPURIOUS. adj. [spurius, Latin.]

1. Not genuine; counterfeit; adulterine.
Reformed churches reject not all traditions, but such as are spurious, superfluous, and not consonant to the prime rule of faith. Whit.

The coin that shows the first is generally rejected as spurious, nor is the other esteemed more when tick by the present Roman medals. Addison.

If any thing else has been printed, in which we really had any hand, it is loaded with spurious additions. Saunders.

2. Not legitimate; bastard.

Your Scipios, Cæsars, Pompeys, and your Catos,
These gods on earth, are all the spurious blood
Of violated minds. Addison.

SPURIOUSNESS. n. f. [from spurious.]
Adulterateness; state of being counterfeit.

You proceed to Hippolytus, and speak of his spuriousness with as much confidence as if you were able to prove it. Waterland.

SPURRING. n. f. [esperian, Fr.] A small sea-fish.

All-faints, do lay for porke and sowfe,
For spirats and spurlings for your house. Tusser.

TO SPURN. v. a. [spornan, Saxon.]

1. To kick; to strike or drive with the foot.

They suppos'd I could rend bars of steel,
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant. Shaksp.
Say my request's unjust,
And spurn me back; but if it be not so,
Thou art not honest. Shaksp.

You that did void your rheum upon my beard,
And foot me as you spurn a stranger car
Over your threshold. Shaksp.

He in the furling smoke
Uplifted spurn'd the ground. Milton.

So was I forc'd
To do a sovereign justice to myself,
And spurn thee from my presence. Dryden.

Then will I draw up my legs, and spurn her from me with my foot. Spectator.

A milk-white bull shall at your altars stand,
That threats a fight, and spurns the rising band.
Pope.

When Athens sinks by fates unjust,
When wild barbarians spurn her dust.
Now they, who reach Parnassus' lofty crown,
Employ their pains to spurn some others down.
Pope.

2. To reject; to scorn; to put away with contempt; to disdain.

In wisdom I should ask your name;
But since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,
What late and nicely I might well delay,
By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn. Shaksp.

3. To treat with contempt.

Domesticks will pay a more cheerful service, when they find themselves not spurned because fortune has laid them at their masters' feet. Locke.

TO SPURN. v. n.

1. To make contemptuous opposition; to make insolent resistance.

A son to blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person;
Nay more, to spurn at your most royal image.
Shaksp.

I, Pandulph, do religiously demand
Why thou against the church, our holy mother,
So wilfully dost spurn? Shaksp.

Instruct me why
Vance should spurn against our rule, and stir
The tributary provinces to war. Philips.

2. To toss up the heels; to kick or struggle.

The drunken chaufman in the kennel spurns,
The glasses flatters, and his charge o'erturns. Gay.
SPURN. n. f. [from the verb.] Kick; insolent and contemptuous treatment.

The insolence of office, and the spurns
That put men of the unworthy takes. Shaksp.

TO SPURT. v. n. [See TO SPURT.] To fly out with a quick stream.

It from a puncture of a sweet, the manner of the spurring out of the blood will flow it. Wigman.

SPURWAY. n. f. [spur and way.] A horse-way; a bundle road distinct from a road for carriages.

SPUTATION. n. f. [sputum, Lat.] The act of spitting.

A moist cough in pueri receives its nomenclature from a moist sputation, or expectoration; a dry one is known by its dry cough. Harvey.

TO SPUTTER. v. n. [sputo, Latin.]

1. To emit moisture in small flying drops.
It is a muddy drop or two fall down,
It scalds along my cheeks, like the green wood,
That, spitting in the flame, works onwards into tears. Dryden.

2. To fly out in small particles with some noise.

The mighty virgin, while her wheel she plies,
Foresees the storm impending in the skies,
When sparkling lamps the spitting insight advance,
And in the sockets only bubbles dance. Dryden.

3. To speak hastily and obscurely, as with the mouth full; to throw out the spittle by hasty speech.

A pinking owl sat sputtering at the fan, and asked him what he meant, to stand staring her in the eyes? L'Estrange.

S P Y

They could neither of them speak their rage ;
and so fell a sputtering at one another, like two roasting apples. Congreve.

Though he sputter through a fession,
It never makes the least impression ;
Whate'er he speaks for madness goes. Swift.
TO SPUTTER. v. a. To throw out with noise and hesitation.

Thou dost with lies the throne invade ;
Obtending heav'n for whate'er ills befall,
And sputtering under specious names thy gall. Dryden.

pretended incitement, to sputter out the basest accusations! Swift.

SPUTTER. n. f. Moisture thrown out in small drops.

SPUTTERER. n. f. [from sputter.] One that sputters.

SPY. n. f. [yspio, Welsh; espion, French;
spie, Dutch; speculator, Latin. It is observed by a German, that spy has been in all ages a word by which the eye, or office of the eye, has been expressed:
thus the Arimaspians of old, fabled to have but one eye, were so called from ari, which among the nations of Caucasus still signifies one, and spi, which has been received from the old Asiatick languages for an eye, sight, or one that sees.] One sent to watch the conduct or motions of others; one sent to gain intelligence in an enemy's camp or country.

We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
And take upon 's the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies. Shakespeare.

Spies of the Volscians
Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about. Shakespeare.

Every corner was possessed by diligent spies
upon their master and mistress. Clarendon.

I come no spy.
With purpose to explore, or to disturb
The secrets of your realm. Milton.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence issued forth a spy.
Or enemy, while God was in his work. Milton.
Nothing lies hid from radiant eyes;
All they subdue become their spies:
Secrets, as chosen jewels, are Presented to oblige the fair. Waller.

Over my men I'll set my careful spies,
To watch rebellion in their very eyes. Dryden.
These wretched spies of wit must then confess,
They take more pains to please themselves the less. Dryden.

Those who attend on their state, are so many spies placed upon them by the publick to observe them nearly. Atterbury.

TO SPY. v. a. [See SPY.]

1. To discover by the eye at a distance, or in a state of concealment; to espy.

I light hath no tongue, but is all eye;

The late fall trembling underneath thy nail:
At thy well-sharpen'd thumb from flesh to thore,
The troubles squeak for fear, the lutes roar. Dryden Blunderbusses, planted in every loop-hole, go off at the squeaking of a fiddle, and the humming of a guitar. Dryden
Who can endure to hear one of the rough old Romans squeaking through the mouth of an eunuch? Addison
How like lutes organs are to ours
They grant, if higher powers think fit,
A bear might soon be made a wit;
And that, for any thing in nature,
Pigs might squeak love odes, do's bark satire. Pope

In florid impotence he speaks,
And, by the prompter breathes, the puppet squeals. Pope Zoilus calls the companions of Ulysses the squeaking pigs of Ithaca. Pope

3. To break silence or secrecy for fear or pain.

cry with a shrill sharp voice; to cry with pain. Squeak forms a short sudden cry, and squall a cry continued.

SQUEAMISH, adj. [for quæmish or qualmish, from qualm.] Nice; fastidious; easily disgusted; having the stomach easily turned; being apt to take offence without much reason. It is used always in dislike either real or ironical.

Yet, for countenance sake, he seemed very squæmish in respect of the charge he had of the prince's Pamela. Sidney

Quoth he, that honour's very squæmish,
That takes a bating for a blemish,
For what's more honourable than tears,
Of him to tatter's seat in wars? Herrick

His under is tickle, and perhaps too plain
The men of squæmish taste to entertain. Southey
It is rare to see a man at once squæmish and voracious. Southey

There is no occasion to oppose the ancients and the moderns, or to be squæmish on either side.
He that wisely conducts his mind in the pursuit of knowledge, will gather what lights he can from either. Locke

SQUEAMISHLY, adv. [from squæmish.] In a fastidious manner.

SQUEAMISHNESS, n. f. [from squæmish.]
Niceness; delicacy; fastidiousness.

and squeezed toward the burden. L'Esclapart

3. To force between close bodies.

To SQUEEZE, v. n.
1. To act or pass, in consequence of compression.
A concave sphere of gold filled with water and folded up, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its mouth in a multitude of small drops, like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold. Newton

What crowds of these, impatiently bold,
In founts and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets, in a raging vein,
Even to the dregs and squeezings of the brain. Pope

2. To force way through close bodies.

Many a public minister comes empty, but when he has crammed his guts, he is able to squeeze hard before he can get off. Locke

SQUEEZE, n. f. [from the verb.] Compression; pressure.

A subtle air still stands with weathers
That bears imprints of winds, of gentle rain
Than those that erst Laertes and Achilles Peaceful sleep, but let the tuneful squeeze
Of lab'ring elbow raise them, out they fly
Melodious, and with sprightly accents charm. Philips

SQUEECH, n. f. Heavy fall. A low ludicious word.

He tore the earth which he had fix'd
From squeech of knight, and form'd and ray'd. Herrick

So soon as the poor devil had recovered the squeech, away he leaps, bawling like mad. Fielding

SQUIB, n. f. [schub, German, to push forward.] This etymology, though the best that I have found, is not very probable.]

1. A small pipe of paper filled with wildfire. Used in sport.

The armada at Cadix, Sir Walter Raleigh was wont pretty to say, were suddenly driven away with squibs, for it was no more than a stratagem of fire boats in order, and sent upon them. Bacon

The most of the fourth company the French valour to a squib, or fire of flag, which burns and crackles for a time, but suddenly extinguishes. Hovel

Lampoons, like squibs, may make a present blaze.

But true, and thank you, pay respect to bays. Waller Lambert begins his speech,
Drives rattling o'er a broken arch,
With squibs and crackers and of, to throw
Among the trembling crowd below. Swift

Crackles on vestals, as squibs on triumphs want,
Proclaim the glory, and augment the hate. Young

2. Any petty fellow. Not in use.

Asked for their paps I every squib,
That list at will them to revile or rub. Spenser throat, it is much to have a mollifying and lyng virtue.

In a squancancy there is danger of suffocation.

SQUINT, adj. [squæte, Dutch, old sq, transverse.] Looking obliquely; looking not directly; looking suspiciously.

When an equal point of hope is clear Does arbitrate the event, my action is That I incline to hope rather than fear, and gladly banish squint suspicion. Milton

To SQUINT, v. n. To look obliquely, to look not in a direct line of vision.

Some can squint when they will, not others set upon a tale, with a countenance that eyes with more outwards, to see the light, to be a squint.

Not a period of this epistle but squint at another over against it.

To SQUINT, v. a.

STAGNANCY. n. f. [from stagnant.] The state of being without motion or ventilation.

STAGNANT. adj. [Stagnans, Lat.] Motionless; still; not agitated; not flowing; not running.

What does the flood from putrefaction keep?
Should it be stagnant in its ample east,
The sun would through it spread destructive heat.

'Twas owing to this hurry and action of the water, that the sand now was cast into layers, and put to a regular settlement, from a water quiet and stagnant.

Immured and buried in perpetual sloth,
That gloomy slumber of the stagnant soul.
STAGNATE. v. n. [Stagnare, Lat.] To lie motionless; to have no course or stream.

The water which now arises must have all stagnated at the surface, and could never possibly have been refunded forth upon the earth, had not the strata been thus raised up.

The element moving through the capillary tubes of plants, and uniting itself to the vessel through which it flows.

Where warbling waters ooze,
Where marshes stagnate

STAGNATION. n. f. [from stagnate.] Stop of course; cessation of motion. It is often applied figuratively to moral or civil images.

As the Alps surround Geneva on all sides, they form a stagnation, where there would be a conflict of vapours, did not the north wind let it stream from time to time.

To what great ends subservient is the wind?
To scatter where'er this active vapour flies,
To scatter the clouds, and agitate the skies.

Is from stagnation and corruption faves
The ocean's ever-rolling waves

STAG. part. adj. [from stagnare.] Sober; grave; regular; composed; not wild; not volatile.

Put thyself
In a humour of less fear, ere wildness
Vaguely my staidest fancies

This seems to our weaker view,
Obscured with black, fluid wisdom's hue.

I could not be a persuader to them of studying much in the spring, after three years that they have well laid their grounds, but to ride out, with great and fluid guides, to all the quarters of the year.

Is the more at ease in his Roger's family, he is not at all of the same fluid persons.

STAGNANT. n. f. [from stagnant.] Sobriety; gravity; regularity; contrariety to wildness.

For being flood of youth, fiercely agitating the
The land, which is the very and fixed fluidity
Is the necessary to to fervent intentions.

It sometimes appears too gay, yet a secret
The prince of youth accompanies his writings,
With the fluidity and sobriety of age he wants.

STAGNANT. n. f. [Stagnant, Welsh, from ys a stagnation.

Rheg Gwyar or Gwawd, Araghacawd. Talafjyn, an old British poet.]

To blot; to spot; to maculate.

I find me a looking-glass;
For at her breast will mix or stain the stone,
Why stain the lives

From the gash a stream
His arm or flow'd, ere while to bright.

For trace again, my fawn: be foes no more,
Nor than your country with your children's gore.

To die; to tinge.

To disgrace; to spot with guilt or infamy.

Of honour void, of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wanted ornaments now sold and stain'd.

STAIN. n. f. [from the verb.] 1. Blot; spot; discoloration.

We nowhere meet with a more pleasing flow than what appears in the heavens at the rising and setting of the sun, which is wholly made up of those different flames of light that flow themselves in clouds of a different situation.

Swift trouts, diversified with crimson flames;
And pikes, the tyrants of the watery plains.

2. Taint of guilt or infamy.
Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains,
But long contracted tithes even in the soul remain.

The reliques of inveterate vice they wear,
And spots of sin

To solemn actions of civility and justice, then suitable ornaments are a beauty: are they only in religion a stain?

Our opinion, concerning the force and virtue which such places have, is, I trust, without any blemish or stain of heresy.

Then heaven and earth, renew'd, shall be made pure
To sanctify, that shall receive no stain.

Ulysses' boys his hands to cast lots, for it he had made the choice himself, they whom he had rejected might have judg'd it a stain upon them for want of merit.

3. Cause of reproach; shame.
Henceby I will lead her that is the praise, and yet the stain, of all woman-kind.

STAINLESS. adj. [from stain.] 1. Free from blots or spots. Not in use.
The phoenix wings are not to stain
For faultless length and fluidity true.

2. Free from sin or reproach.
I cannot love him,
Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and fluid youth.

STAIR. n. f. [stiegen, Saxon; steghe, Dutch.] Steps by which we ascend from the lower part of a building to the upper.

STAIR. was anciently used for the whole order of steps; but stair now, if it be used at all, signifies, as in Milton, only one flight of steps.

A good ladder to a high tower will not make his stair upright, but winding about it will compels about, that the steps must be the more unsteady.

How many cowards, whose hearts are all as fallow
As flaxen of hand, war yet upon their claims
The heads of Hercules and tower'd Mars!

Slaver with hips as common as the stairs
That mount the capital.

I would have one only goodly general over stairs,
Of some forty foot high.

St. James' Hotel repassing to the tower by night, attended by two servants, stood at the main door, and sent the two up to the tower to the tower.

The stairs were such as were in the city
And stairs of colour and descending.

Satan rises on the lower stairs,
That lead'd by steps of gold to heaven's gate,
Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
Of all this world.

Flourishing he frames,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings;
Nor heedful of stairs, but down the depth he threw
His body; on his back the door he drew.

STAIRCASE. n. f. [stair and case.] The part of a fabric that contains the stairs.

To make a complete staircase is a curious piece of architecture.

I cannot forbear mentioning a staircase, where the richness of the ascent, the disposition of the lights, and the convenient landings are admirably contrived.

STAKE. n. f. [staca, Saxon; stacck, Dutch; staca, Spanish.]

1. A post or strong stick fixed in the ground. The more I shook the stake which he had planted in the ground of my heart, the deeper still it sunk into it.

His credit in the world might stand the poor town in great need, as hitherto their ministers foreign education hath been the best stake in their hedge.

He wanted pikes to let before his archers,
Instead whereof sharp stakes, pluck'd out of hedges,
They pitched in the ground.

In France the grapes that make the wine grow upon low vines bound to small stakes, and the ruled vines in arbors make but verjuice.

Or thrust upon stakes, or bend the forks, or twine the bawling twigs to tie the struggling vine.

2. A piece of long tough wood.
While he whistled in his eyes round
The brand, a sharp-pointed stake strong Dryas found,
And in the shoulder's joint imbed the wound.

3. Any thing placed as a pallade or fence.
That hollow I should know what are you?
Speak

Could not too near, you fall on non-stakes else.

4. The post to which a beast is tied to be baited.
We met at the stake,
And bay'd about with many enemies.

Have you not let some honour at the stake,
And baited it with all the unmuzzled thoughts
That tyrannous hearts are in the dark?

5. Any thing pledged or wagered. I know not well whence it had this meaning: I suppose it is so named from being at stake, that is, in a state of hazard like an animal baited, and in hazard from which it cannot be withdrawn.

'Tis time that pleasure now to take,
Or little time to be to make.

And more widely the last stake,
Others, what interest hath I make
To save my last important stake.

When the most part have come to quake,
He ventures more for to great a stake.

The marching town is home to either shore,
And for their pikes the throwing nations fear.

6. The state of being hazarded, pledged, or wagered.
The game was so contrived, that one particular call took up the whole stake, and, when some others came up, you laid down.

7. The stake is a small anvil, which stands upon a small iron foot on the workbench, to reinforce as occasion offers; or else it hath a strong iron spike at the bottom, let into some place of the workbench, not to be removed. Its office is to set small cold work straight upon, or to cut or punch upon with the cold chisel or cold punch.

8. To stake. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To fasten, support, or defend with posts set upright.

Stake and bind up your weakest plants and flowers against the winds, before they in a moment prostrate a whole year's labour. Eachin

2. To wager; to hazard; to put to hazard.

Is a man betrayed in his nearest concerns? The game is, he relied upon the services of a pack of villains, whose signed nothing but their own game, and to stake him while they played for their lives. South.

Persons, after their passions have been long open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons than stake their miserable lives on the facets of a revolution. Addison.

They durst not stake their present and future happiness on their own chimerical imaginations. Addison.

I'll stake you' lamb that near the fountain plays, And from the brink he's dancing wide his eyes. Pope.

His monstrous enemy

With steady steps came stalking in his sight. Spenser.

Shall your city call us lord,

In that behalf which we challeng'd it?

Or shall we give the signal to our rage,

And stalk in blood to our poll's throat? Shakespeare.

Unfold th' eternal door.

You see before the gate what stalking ghost

Commands the guards, what sentries keep the post. Dryden.

With mainly men he stalk'd along the ground,

Not wouted voice belid nor vaunting sound. Dryden.

Then stalking through the deep

He toils the ocean, while the topmost wave

Scarcely reaches up his middle tide. Addison.

Vexatious thought full found my flying mind,

Nor found by hunts, nor to place confin'd;

Haunted my night, and terrified my days,

Stalk'd through my gardens, and pursued my ways,

Nor thit from artful bow'r, nor lost in winding maze. Prior.

Scornful turning from the shore

My haughty step, I stalk'd the valley o'er. Pope.

vulgar called a starshoot, as if it remained up to the extinction of a falling star. Boyle.

TO START. v. n. [startzen, German.]

1. To feel a sudden and involuntary twitch or motion of the animal frame, on the apprehension of danger.

Starting is no apprehension of the thing feared, and in that kind it is a motion of thinking, and likewise an inquisition, in the beginning, what the matter should be, and in that kind it is a motion of erection; and, therefore, when a man would sit on suddenly to any thing, he starteth; for the start is an erection of the spirits to attend. Ramus.

A shape appear'd
Bending to look on me: I started back,
It started back. Shakespeare.

An open enemy to flattery, especially from a friend, from whom he started to meet the start of appearance of that terrible kindred. Boyle.

I start as from some dreadful dream,
And often ask myself if yet awake. Dryden.

As his doubts decline,
He dreads just vengeance, and he starts at him. Boyle.

He starts at every new appearance, as if he were waking and felicitous for fear of a surprise. Boyle.

2. To rise suddenly: commonly with up.

Then started up, in queen Elizabeth's reign, a new presbyterian sect, which rendered a sort of discipline to the queen and to the state. Boyle.

Chac'd by these' strange, trees starting from the ground
Have follow'd with delight the powerful sound.

They starting up beheld the heavy fight. Dryden.
The sound often works in search of some hidden ideas, though sometimes they start up in our minds of their own accord. Locke.

Might Dryden bless once more our eyes,
New Blackmores and new Milbourns must arise;
Nay, should great Homer lift his awful head,
Zelus again would start up from the dead. Pope

3. To move with sudden quickness.

The flowers, call'd out of their beds,
Start, and raise up their drowsy heads. Cleaveland.

A spirit fit to start into an empire,
And look the world to law. Dryden.

She at the tumorous roll'd her eyes around,
And snatch'd the starting serpents from the ground. Pope.

4. To shrink; to winch.

What track, what starting hole, canst thou find out, to hide thee from this open flame? Shaksp.

With trial fire touch me his finger end;
Fire be chaster, the flame will back defend,
And turn him to no pain; but, if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shaksp. ire.

5. To deviate.

The lords and gentlemen take all the meanest fort upon themselves; for they are best able to bring them in, whenever any of them starts out. Spenser.

Th' old drudging fun from his long-beaten way
Shall at thy voice start and misguide the day;
The jocund orbs shall break their measur'd pace,
And stubborn poles change their allotted place. Cowley.

I rank him with the prodigies of fane,
With things which start from nature's common rules,
With bearded infants, and with teeming mules. Creech.

Keep your soul to the work when ready to start aside, unless you will be a slave to every wild imagination. Watts.

6. To set out from the barrier at a race.

It seems to be rather a terminus a quo than a true principle, as the starting post is none of the horse's legs. Boyle.

Should some god tell me, that I should be born
And try again, his offer I should scorn;
Alas! when I have ended well my race,
To be led back to my first starting place. Denham.

When in the goal they start,
The youthful characters with heaving heart
Rush to the race. Dryden.

The clangor of the trumpet gives the sign,
At once the wait, advancing in a line. Dryden

7. To set out on any pursuit.

Far courts of passion, where two lovers start
And run together, heart still yok'd with heart. Waller

People, when they have made themselves weary, Get up their rest upon the very spot where they stood. L'Estrange.

When two start into the world together, he that is thrown behind, unless his mind proves generous, will be displaced with the other. Collier.

TO START. v. a.

Bare inclination, and the start of spleen,
To fight against me under Percy's pay. Shaksp. ire.

Several starts of fancy, off-hand, look well enough; but bring them to the test, and there is nothing in 'em. L'Estrange

Are they not only to disguise our passions,
To set our looks at variance with our thoughts,
To check the starts and fallies of the soul? Addison

We were well enough pleased with this start of thought. Addison

4. Sudden fit; intermitted action.

He thought her eyes had cross'd her tongue;
For the did speak in starts distractedly. Shaksp. ire.

Thy forms are studied arts
Thy sally ways are narrow straits,
Thy curtesy but hidden starts,
And what thou call'st thy gifts are baits. Ben Jonson

Nature does nothing by starts and leaps, or in a hurry, but all her motions are gradual. L'Estrange.

An ambiguous expression, a little clew, or a start of passion, is not enough to take leave upon.
Collier.

5. A quick spring or motion; a shoot; a push.

In strings, the more they are wound up and framed, and thereby give a more quick start back, the more treble is the sound, and the flacker they are, or less wound up, the bader is the sound. Bacon

Both cause the firing to give a quicker start. Bacon.

How could water make those visible starts upon freezing, but by some subtle freezing principle which as suddenly shoots on it? Grew.

6. First emission from the barrier; act of setting out.

You stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. Shaksp. ire.

All leapt to start it,
And every man then for the start cast in his proper
lot. Chapman

If a man deal with another upon conditions, the start of first performance is all. Bacon.

7. To get the START. To begin before another; to obtain advantage over another.

Get the start of the majestic world. Shaksp. ire.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of arbitrement, and the other party during that time doth cautiously get the start and advantage at common law, yet the pretorian court will set back all things in statu quo prima. Bacon.

Doubtless some other heart
Will get the start;
And, stepping in before,
Will take possession of the sacred shore
Of hidden sweets. Creech.

So service shall with steeted fingers toil,
And labour shall refresh itself with hope. Shakespeare.

From his metal was his party steel'd;
Which, once in him rebated, all the rest
Torn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead. Shakespeare.

O God of battles! steel my soldiers hearts;
Presents them not with fear. Shakespeare.

Why will you fight against sweet sleep?
And steel your heart to such a world of care? Shakespeare.

Man, foolish man!

Scarcely know'st thou how thy self began,
Yet, steel'd with studied boldness, thou dost
To send thy doubtful reason's dazzled eye
Through the mysterious gulf of vast mortality. Pope.

Let the steel'd Turk be deaf to censure;
See virgins ravish'd with reluctant eyes. Shakespeare.

So perish all whose breasts the turn steel'd
And curs'd with hearts unknowing how to yield. Shakespeare.

His flock before him stepping to the fold. Thomson.

STEP. n. f. [strep, Saxon; stap, Dutch.]

1. Progression by one removal of the foot.

Thou found and firm-set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk. Shaksp.

Lang'ring perdition, worse than any death
Can be at once, shall step by step attend
You and your ways. Shakspeare.

Who was the first to explore th' untrodden path,
When life was hazarded in every step? Addison.

2. One remove in climbing; hold for the foot; a stair.

While Solyman lay at Buda, seven bloody heads of bulghos slain in battle, were set in order upon a wooden step. Knolles.

The breadth of every single step or stair should be never less than one foot, nor more than eighteen inches. Wotton.

Those heights where William's virtue might have flourish'd,
And on the subject world look'd safely down,
By Marlbro' pass'd, the props and steps were made Sublimar yet to raise his queen's renown. Prior.

It was a saying among the ancients, Truth lies in a well; and, to carry on this metaphor, we may justly say, that logic does supply us with steps, whereby we may go down to reach the water. Watts.

3. Quantity of space pass'd or measured by one removal of the foot.

The gradus, a Roman measure, may be translated a step, or the half of a passus or pace. Arbuthnot.

In this deep forest. Dryden.

6. Gradation; degree.

The fume in for substance hath sundry steps and degrees, in respect whereof one man becomes a more heinous offender than another. Perkins.

7. Progression; act of advancing.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from phenomena, and afterwards to tell us how the properties and actions of all corporeal things follow from those manifest principles, would be a very great step in philosophy, though the causes of these principles were not yet discovered. Newton.

One injury is best defended by a second, and thus by a third: by these steps the old masters of the palace in France became masters of the kingdom; and by these steps a general during pleasure might have grown into a general for life, and a general for life into a king. Swift.

The quest must not proceed too swiftly towards the determination of his point, that he may with more ease draw the learner to those principles step by step, from whence the final conclusion will arise.
Watts.

8. Footstep; print of the foot.

From hence Astrea took her flight, and here
The prints of her departing steps appear. Dryden.

9. Gait; manner of walking.

With a submissive step I basted down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

10. Action; instance of conduct.

The reputation of a man depends upon the step steps he makes in the world. Pope.

STEP, in composition, signifies one who is related only by marriage. [strep, Sax., from strepian, to deprive, or make an orphan: for the Saxons not only said a step-mother, but a step-daughter, or step-son;
to which it indeed, according to this etymology, more properly belongs but as it is now seldom applied but to the mother, it seems to mean, in the mind of those who use it, a woman who has stepped into the vacant place of the true mother.]

How should their minds chafe but misdoubt, let this discipline, which always you match with divine doctrine as her natural and true sister, be found to to all kinds of knowledge a step-mother? Hooker.

His wanton step-dame loved him the more;
But, when the law her offer'd sweets refuse,
Her love she turn'd to hate. Spenser.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most step-mothers,
Ill-eyed unto you. Shakspeare.

A father cruel, and a step-dame false, Shakspeare.
Cato, the elder, being aged, buried his wife, and married a young woman: his son came to him, and said, Sir, what have I offended, that you have brought a step-mother into your house? The old man answered, Nay, quite the contrary, son, thou pleasest me so well, as I would be glad to have more such. Bacon.

The name of step-dame, your practice'd art,
By which you have estrang'd my father's heart,
All you have done against me, or design,
Shows your aversion, but begets not mine. Dryden.

A step-dame too I have, a curld she,
Who rules my hen-peck'd fire, and orders me.

Any body would have guessed misa to have been a bred up under the influence of a cruel step-dame, and John to be the foundling of a tender mother. Arbuthnot.

STEPPINGSTONE. n. f. [step and stone.]
Stone laid to catch the foot, and save it from wet or dirt.

Like steppingstones to save a slide,
In streets where kennels are too wide. Swift.

STERCORA'CEOUS. adj. [stercora, Lat.] Belonging to dung; partaking of the nature of dung.

Green juicy vegetable join a heap together, and a heat equal to that of a human body; the stercora take and odour, in taste resemble putrid flesh, and in smell human faeces. Abbot.

STERCORA'TION. n. f. [from stercora, Lat.]
The act of dunging; the act of manure-ing with dung.

The first help is stercora'tion: the sheep's dung is one of the best, and the next, dung of horses that of horses. Pope.

Stercora'tion is reasonable.

The exterior pulp of the fruit serves for the security of the seed, which it hangs the plant, but, after it is fallen upon the soil, for the stercora'tion of the soil, and promote the growth, though not the first germination of the plant. Locke.

suring all sorts of solid bodies. Harris.

STERILE. adj. [sterile, French; sterilis, Latin.] Barren; unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity.

Our elders say,

The barren, touched in this holy chafe,
Shake off their steril curle. Shaksp.

The sea mangle steril, and rocky hard. Shaksp.
In very steril years, corn sown will grow to ancible kind. Bacon.

To separate seeds, put them in water: such as are corrupted and steril swim. Bacon.

She is grown steril and barren, and her births of animals are now very inconsiderable. More.

When the vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile and mineral matter, such as was inept for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

STERILITY. n. f. [sterilité, French; steri-litas, from sterilis, Latin.] Barrenness;
want of fecundity; unfruitfulness.

Spain is thin town of people, by reason of the fertility of the soil, and because their natives are exhausted by to many employments in such vast territories. Bacon.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fattened everlastingly with the adamant chain of specific gravity, if Almighty had not said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding feed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit. Bentley.

He had more frequent occasion for repetition than any poet; yet one cannot ascribe this to any sterility of expression, but to the genius of his times, which delighted in their reiterated verses. Pope.

To STERILIZE. v. a. [from steril.] To make barren; to deprive of fecundity, or the power of production.

May we not as well suppose the sterilizing the earth was suspended for some time, till the deluge became the executioner of it? Woodward.

Go! sterilize the fertile with thy rage. Savage.

STERLING. adj. [Of this word many derivations have been offered; the most probable of which is that offered by Camden, who derives it from the Easterlings, who were employed as coiners.]

1. An epithet by which genuine English money is discriminated.

The king's treasure, that he left at his death, amounted unto eighteen hundred thousand pounds sterling. Bacon.

Several of them would rather chuse to count out a tun in silver than in pounds sterling. Addison.

2. Genuine; having passed the test.

There is not one single witty phrase in this collection, which hath not received the stamp and approbation of one hundred years; he may therefore be secure to find them all genuine, sterling, and authentic. Swift.

STERLING. n. f. [sterlingum, low Latin,
from the adjective.]

1. English coin; money.

This visionary various projects tries,
And knows that to be rich is to be wise:
By useful observation he can tell
The sacred chariot that in true sterling dwell;
How gold makes a patrician of a slave,
A dwarf an Atlas, a Theristes a bravo. South.

Great name! which in our rolls records a band,
Leads honour, and protects the learned bands,
Accept this offering to thy bounty due,
And Roman wealth in English sterling view. C. Arbuthnot.

2. Standard rate.

STERN. adj. [steynn, Saxon.]

1. Severe of countenance; truculent of aspect.

Why look you still so stern and tragical. Shaksp.
I would outlive the sternest eyes that look,
Outlive the heart most daring on the earth,
Pick the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
Yes, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady. Shaksp.

It shall not be amiss here to present the stern but lively countenance of this so famous a man. Knolles.

Gods and men
Fear'd her stern frown, and she was queen o' th' woods. Milton.

The judge supreme soon cast a stedfast eye,
Stern, yet temper'd with benignity. Harte.

2. Severe of manners; harsh; unrelenting;
cruel.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou, stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shaksp.

The common executioner, Whose heart th' accustom'd sight of death makes hard.

Falls not the ax upon the humbled neck
But first begs pardon: will you sterner be Than he that deals and lives by bloody drops? Shaksp.

Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?

When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept;
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff. Shaksp.

Then shall the war, and stern debate, and strife
Immortal, be the business of my life;
And in thy flame, the dusty spoils among,
High on the burnish'd roof my banner shall be hung. Dryden.

How, stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We left the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.

3. Hard; afflictive.

It wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter, turn the key,
All cruels else submit to. Shaksp.

Mischance flood,
And with his stern Steele drew in streams the blood. Chapman.

STERN. n. f. [steyn, Saxon; of the same original with stern.]

1. The hind part of the ship where the rudder is placed.

Let a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, as the prow and stern, the ribs, masts, ropes, and shrouds, he would form but a very lame idea of it. Harris.

They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land. Dryden.

2. Part of management; direction.

The king from Elum I intend to send,
And fit at chieftest stern of publick weal. Shaksp.

3. The hinder part of any thing.

With doubled toes high above the ground,
Though wrapping up her wreathed stern around. Spenser.

STERNAGE. n. f. [from stern.] The sternage or stern. Not used.

Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England as dead midnight still. Shaksp.

STERNLY. adv. [from stern.] In a stern manner; severely; truculently.

No mountain lion tore
Two lambs to sternly. Chapman.

Sternly he pronounc'd
The rigid interdiction. Milton.

Yet sure thou art not, nor thy face, the same,
Nor thy limbs moulded in to soft a frame;
Thou look'st more sternly, dost more strongly move,
And more of awe thou bear'st, and less of love. Dry.

STERNNESS. n. f. [from stern.]

1. Severity of look.

Of stature huge, and eke of courage bold,
That tens of men amaz'd their sternness do behold. Spenser.

How would he look, to see his work so noble Wildly bound up! or how Should I, in these my borrow'd haunts, behold
The sternness of his presence? Shaksp.

2. Severity or harshness of manners.

I have sternness in my soul enough
To hear of soldiers work. Dryden.

STERNON. n. f. [steynon.] The breastbone.

A soldier was shot in the breast through the sternon. Wifeman.

STERNUTATION. n. f. [sternutatio, Lat.]

The act of sneezing.

Sternutation is a convulsive shaking of the nerves and muscles, occasioned by an irritation of those in the nostrils. Quincy.

Concerning sternutation, or sneezing, and the custom of saluting upon that motion, it is generally believed to derive its original from a disease wherein sternutation proved mortal, and such as thee died. Brown.

STERNUTATIVE. adj. [sternutatif, Fr.
from sternuto, Lat.] Having the quality of provoking to sneeze.

STERNUTATORY. n. f. [sternutatoire, Fr.
from sternuto, Lat.] Medicine that provokes to sneeze.

Physicians, in persons near death, use sternutatives, or such medicines as provoke unto sneezing, when, if the faculty arise, and sternutation ensue,
they conceive hopes of life. Brown.

STEVEN. n. f. [steyven, Sax.] A cry, or loud clamour.

Ne sooner was out, but faster than thought,
Fast by the hide the wolf Lowder caught,
And had not Fort's name to the steyven, Lowder had been slain thence some even. Spenser.

To STEW. v. a. [stuer, Fr. stoven, Dut.]
To seeth any thing in a slow moist heat, with little water.

Ere I was risen from the place, that show'd
My duty kneeling, came a tacking post.

Stew'd in his hate, built breastless Shaksp.
I braided my skin with playing at twoid and dew, get with a madder of fence, three yearys to a dush of stew'd prunes. Shaksp.

To STEW. v. n. To be seethed in a slow moist heat.

STEW. n. f. [stewe, Fr. stufa, Ital. stufa, Spanish.]

1. A bagnio; a hothouse.

As burning stews from his boiling stew
Dorth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
And rugged ribs of mountains molten new,
Enwrapt in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke. Spenser.

The Lydians were inhabited by Cæus to use any armour, and give themselves to baths and stews. Abbot.

2. A brothel; a house of prostitution.

[This signification is by some imputed to this, that there were licensed brothels near the stews or fishponds in Southwark;
but probably stew, like bagnio, took had signification from bad use. It may be doubted whether it has any singular.
South uses it in a plural termination with a singular sense. Shaksp. makes it singular.]

There be that hate harlots, and never were at the stews; that abhor falsehood, and never brake promise. Acham.

I have seen corruption boil and bubble,
Till it o'er-run the stew. Shaksp.

With them there are no stews, no dilute houses, nor courtesans. Bacon.

Her, though sev'n years she in the stews had laid,

A numery dust receive and think a maid;
And, though in childbirth's labour she did lie,
Midwives would swear twere but a tympany. Donne.

What good rate for warld take the park or stews,
Who among troops of faultless mynion can choose? Rowe.

Making his own house a stew, a bachel, and a school of lewdness, to mislead the rudiments of vice into the unwary flexible years of his poor children. South.

a small pond where fish are kept for the table.

STEWARDS. n. f. [steyward, Saxon.]

1. One who manages the affairs of another.

There sat, yoked in red
Down to the ground, a comely personage,
That in his hand a white rod managed;
He steward was, high diet, ripe of age,
And in demeanour sober, and in council sage. Spenser.

Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still. Shaksp.

Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, Steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shakespeare
How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship, for thou thyself be no longer Steward. Luke

Improve all those talents the providence of God hath intrusted us with, because we are but Stewards, and must give an account of them. Nelson

When a Steward defrauds his lord, he must connive at the rest of the servants while they are following the same practice. Suif

What can be a greater honour, than to be chosen one of the Stewards and dispensers of God's bounty to mankind? What can give a generous spirit more complacency, than to consider that great numbers owe to him, under God, their subsistence, and the good conduct of their lives. Suif

Just Steward of the bounty he receiv'd,
And dying poorer than the poor relief'd. Harte

2. An officer of state.

would have been manifest as soon as they should move from the place where they were, and from whence they were not to stir. Clarendon.

We acknowledge a man to be mad or melancholy, who fancies himself to be glass, and so is afraid of stirring, or, taking himself to be wax, dares not let the sun shine upon him. Law.

2. To be in motion; not to be still; to pass from inactivity to motion.

The great Judge of all knows every different degree of human improvement, from these weak stirrings and tendencies of the will, which have not yet formed themselves into regular purposes, to the last entire consummation of a good habit. Spectator.

3. To become the object of notice.

If they happen to have any superior character,

they fancy they have a right to talk freely upon every thing that stirs or appears. Watts.

4. To rise in the morning. This is a colloquial and familiar use.

If the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her there's one Callio out-of her a little favour of speech. Shakespeare.

STIR, n. f. [stir, Runick, a battle;

stirf, noise, Welsh.]

a. Tumult; bustle.

What hallooing and what stir is this to day?

These are my mates, that make their wills their

law,

Have some unhappy passenger in chace. Shaks.

Tumultuous stirs upon this strife ensue. Drayton.

He hath spun a fair thread, to make all this stir

for such a necessity as no man ever denied.

Bishop Bramhall.

Tell, said the soldier, miserable stir,

Why all these words, this clamour, and this stir?

Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day?

Denham.

The great stirs of the disputing world are but the conflicts of the humours. Glanville.

After all this stir about them, they are good for nothing. Tillotson.

Consider, after so much stir about genus and species, how few words we have yet settled definitions of. Locke.

Silence is usually worse than the fiercest and loudest accusations; since it proceeds from a kind of numbness or stupidity of conscience, and an absolute dominion obtained by sin over the soul, so that it shall not so much as dare to complain or make a stir. South.

2. Commotion; public disturbance; tumultuous disorder; seditious uproar.

Whosoever the earl shall die, all those lands are to come unto her majesty; he is like to make a stir there, though of himself of no power, yet through supportance of some others who lie in the wind. Spenser.

He did make these stirs, grieving that the name of Christ was at all brought into those parts. Abbot.

Being advertised of some stirs raised by his unnatural sons in England, he departed out of Ireland without a blow. DuRoi.

Raphael, thou hear'st what stir on earth

Satan, from hell 'scap'd through the darksome gulf,

Hath rais'd in Paradise, and how disturb'd

This night the human pair. Milton.

3. Agitation of thoughts; conflicting passion.

He did keep

The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief

Still waving, as the stirs and fits of 's mind

Could best express how flow his soul fail'd on,

How swift his lap. Shakespeare.

STIRIOUS, adj. [from stiria, Lat.] Resembling iceles.

Chrysal is found sometimes in rocks, and in some places not much unlike the stirious or stillicious dependencies of ice. Brown.

STIRP, n. f. [stirps, Lat.] Race; family;

generation. Not used.

Sundry nations got footing in that land, of the which there yet remain divers great families and stirps. Spenser.

Democracies are less subject to sedition than when there are stirps of nobles. Bacon.

All nations of might and fame resorted hither;

of whom we have some stirps and little tribes with us at this day. Bacon.

STIRRED, n. f. [from stir.]

1. One who is in motion; one who puts in motion.

2. A riser in the morning.

Come on; give me your hand, stir; an early stirrer. Shakespeare.

3. An inciter; an instigator.

4. STIRRED up. An inciter; an instigator.

A perpetual spring, not found elsewhere but in the Indies only, by reason of the sun's neighbourhood, the life and stirrer up of nature in a perpetual activity. Raleigh.

Will it not reflect on thy character, Nic, to turn barterer in thy old days; a stirrer up of quarrels betwixt thy neighbours? Arbutnot.

STIRRUPE, n. f. [stirrup, stirnap; from stir, Saxon, to climb, and nap, a cord.] An iron hoop suspended by a strap, in which the horseman sets his foot when he mounts or rides.

Neither is his manner of mounting unseemly, though he lack stirrups; for in his getting up, his horse is still going, whereby he gaineth way; and therefore the stirrup was called so in Saxon, as it was, a day to get up; being derived of the old English word stir, which is to get up, or mount.

Ha! thou not kiss'd my hand, and held my stirrup? Shakespeare.

His horsehipped with an old motby saddle, the stirrups of no kindred. Shakespeare.

My friend, judge not me,

Thou seest I judge not thee.

Between the stirrup and the ground,

Mercy I ask'd, mercy I found. Camden.

At this the knight began to cheer up,

And raising up himself on stirrup,

Cried out, Victoria. Hudibras.

To STITCH, v. a. [sticke, Danish; sticken

Dutch.]

work.

STITCH, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pass of the needle and thread through any thing.

2. [from stician, Saxon.] A sharp lancet nating pain.

If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourself into stitches, follow me; yond gull Malvolio is turned heathen, a very renegade. Shakespeare.

A simple bloody sputation of the lungs is disferenced from a pleurisy, which is ever painful and attended with a stitch. Harvey.

3. A link of yarn in knitting.

There fell twenty stitches in his stocking.

Mattews.

4. In Chapman it seems to mean furrows or ridges.

Many men at plow he made, and drove cart

here and there,

And turn'd up stitches orderly. Chapman.

5. In the following line, allusion is made to a knit stock.

A stitch-fall'n cheek, that hangs below the jaw,

Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw

For an old grandam ape. Dryden.

STITCHERY, n. f. [from stitch.] Needlework. In contempt.

Come lay aside your stitchery; play the idle housewife with me this afternoon. Shakespeare.

thenceforth becomes an horse-boy or a stock to some horn, inhering himself to his sword, and the gentlemanly trade of stealing. Spenser.

STOCCA'DO. n. f. [Staccato, from stocco, a rapier, Ital.] A thrust with the rapier.
You stand on distance, your passes, stoccados, and I knew not what. Shakespeare.

STOCK. n. f. [stoc, Saxon; stock, Dut.
stoc, French.]

1. The trunk; the body of a plant.

That furious bear
His precious horn, fought of his enemies,
Sinks in the stock, ne thence can be releas'd.

There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again, though the root was old in the earth, and the stock die in the ground. Job.

2. The trunk into which a graft is inserted.
The cion over-rueth the stock quite; and the stock is passive only, and giveth alimant but no motion to the graft. Bacon.

As fruits ungrateful to the planter's care,
On savage stocks inserted, learn to bear;
The cion virtues thus from pussions shoot,
Wild nature's vigour working at the root. Pope.

3. A log; a post.
That they kept thy truth so pure of old,
When all our fathers worshipp'd stocks and stones, Forget not. Milton.

Why all this fury? What's the matter,
That asks must come from Thrace to dance?
Must stupid stocks be taught to flatter?
And is there no such wood in France? Prior.

4. A man proverbially stupid.
What tyranny is this, my heart to thrall,
And eke my tongue with proud restraint to tie,
That neither I may speak nor think at all,
But like a stupid stock in silence die? Spenser.

While we admire
This virtue and this moral discipline,
Let's be no stocks, nor no stocks. Shakespeare.

5. The handle of any thing.
6. A support of a ship while it is building.
Fresh supplies of ships,
And such as fitted since the fight had been,
Or new from stocks were fall'n into the road. Dryden.

7. [Stocco, a rapier, Italian.] A thrust; a stoccado.
To see thee here, to see thee there; to see thee pass thy paneto, thy stock, thy reverse. Shakespeare.

8. Something made of linen; a cravat;
a close neckcloth. Anciently a cover for the leg, now stocking.

His lackey with a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot hose on the other. Shakespeare.

9. A race; a lineage; a family.
Say what stock he springs of.—
—The noble house of Marcius. Shakespeare.

His early virtues to that ancient stock
Gave as much honour as from thence he took.
Waller.

The like shall sing
All prophecy, that of the royal stock
Of David, so I unmar this king, shall rise
A son, the woman's seed. Milton.

Thou hast seen one world begin and end,
And man, as from a second stock, proceed. Milton.

To no human stock
We owe this fierce unkindness; but the rock,
That cloven rock, produc'd thee. Waller.

Thy mother was no goddess, nor thy stock
From Dardanus; but in some horrid rock, Perfidious wretch, rough Caucasus thee bred. Denham.

10. The principal; capital store; fund already provided.
Prodigal men
Feel not their own stock wasting. Ben Jonson.

Let the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign, so the stock of the kingdom shall yearly increase; for then the balance of trade must be returned in money or bullion. Bacon.

A king, against a storm, must forese to a convenient stock of treasure. Bacon.

'Tis the place where God promises and delights to dispense larger proportions of his favour, that he may fix a mark of honour on his sanctuary, and recommend it to the sons of men, upon the stock of their own interest as well as his own glory. South.

Some honour of your own acquire;
Add to that stock, which justly we bestow,
Of those blest shades to whom you all things owe. Dryden.

Yet was she not profuse, but fear'd to waste,
And wisely manag'd that the stock might last;
That all might be supplied, and she not grieve,
When crowds appear'd, she had not to relieve;
Which to prevent, the full increas'd her store;
Laid up, and spar'd, that she might give the more. Dryden.

Beneath one law bees live,
And with one common stock their traffick drive:
All is the state's, the state provides for all. Dryden.

Nor do those ills on single bodies prey;
But oftner bring the nation to decay,
And sweep the present stock and future hope away. Dryden.

If parents die without actually transferring their right to another, why does it not return to the common stock of mankind? Locke.

When we brought it out, it took such a quantity of air into its lungs, that it swelled almost twice as big as before; and it was perhaps on this stock of air that it lived a minute longer the second time. Addison.

Be ready to give, and glad to distribute, by setting apart something out of thy stock for the use of some charities. Atterbury.

Of those stars, which our imperfect eye
Has doom'd and fix'd to one eternal sky,
Each, by a native stock of honour great,
May dart strong influence, and diffuse kind heat. Prior.

They had law-suits; but, though they spent their income, they never mortgaged the stock. Arbuthnot.

She has divided part of her estate amongst them,
that every one may be charitable out of their own stock, and each of them take it in their turns to provide for the poor and sick of the parish. Lowe.

11. Quantity; store; body.
He proposes to himself no small stock of fame in future ages, in being the first who has undertaken this design. Arbuthnot.

12. A fund established by the government, of which the value rises and falls by artifice or chance.
An artificial wealth of funds and stocks was in the hands of those who had been plundering the publick. Swift.

Statesman and patriot ply alike the stocks,
Peereless and butler share alike the box. Pope.

To Stock. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To store; to fill sufficiently.
If a man will commit such rules to his memory,
and stock his mind with portions of scripture answerable to all the heads of duty, his conscience can never be at a loss. South.

I, who before with shepherds in the groves
Sung to my oaten pipe their rural loves,
Manur'd the globe, and stock'd the fruitful plain. Dryden.

The world begun to be stocked with people, and human industry drained those uninhabitable places. Burnet.

Springs and rivers are by large supplies continually stocked with water. Woodward.

2. To lay up in store: as, he stocks what he cannot use.

3. To put in the stocks. See STOCKS.
Call not your stocks for me: I serve the king,
On whose employment I was sent to you;
You shall do small respect, shew too bold malice
Against the grace and person of my master, Stocking his messenger. Shakespeare.

4. To Stock up. To extirpate.
The wild boar not only spoils her branches, but stocks up her roots. Decay of Piety.

STOCKDOVE. n. f. [palmaber.] Ringdove.

Stockdoves and turtles tell their am'rous pain,
And, from the lofty clus, of love complain. Dryden.

Dried cod, so called from its hardness.

STOCKGILLYFLOWER. n. f. [leucoium, Lat.] A plant. Müller.

STOCKING. n. f. [The original word seems to be stock; whence stocks, a prison for the legs. Stock, in the old language, made the plural stocken, which was used for a pair of stocks or covers for the legs.
Stocken was in time taken for a singular, and pronounced stocking. The like corruption has happened to chick, chicken, chickens.] The covering of the leg.

In his first approach before my lady he will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a colour she abhors. Shakespeare.

By the loyalty of that town he procured fines,
stockings, and money for his soldiers. Clarendon.

Unless we could expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us so fit materials for clothing as the wool of sheep? Morse.

He spent half a day to look for his odd stocking,
when he had them both upon a leg. Leffrange.

At am'rous Flavia is the stocking thrown;
That very night he long'd to lie alone. Pope.

The families of farmers live in filth and nat-tiness, without a shoe or stocking to their feet. Swift.

To STOCKING. v. a. [from the noun.]
To dress in stockings.
Stocking'd with loads of fat town dirt he goes. Dryden.

STOCKJOBBER. n. f. [Stock and job.] A low wretch, who gets money by buying and selling shares in the funds.
The stockjobber thus from 'Change-alley gods down,
And tips you the freeman a wink;
Let me have but your vote to serve for the town,
And here is a guinea to drink. Swift.

STOCKISH. adj. [from stock.] Hard;
blockish.

The poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods:
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature. Shakespeare.

STOCKLOCK. n. f. [Stock and lock.] Lock fixed in wood.

There are locks for several purposes; as street-door-locks, called stocklocks; chamber-door-locks, called spring-locks; and cupboard locks. Moxam.

STOMACH. n. f. [stomach, Fr. stomachus, Latin.]

1. The ventricle in which food is digested.

If you're sick at sea,
Or stomach quailn'd at land, a dram of this Will drive away distemper. Shakespeare.

This filthy simile, this beastly line,
Quite turns my stomach. Pope.

2. Appetite; desire of food.

Tell me, what is 't that takes from thee
Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep? Shakespeare.

Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in foulest letters?
She either gives a stomach, and no food;
Such are the poor in health: or else a feast,
And takes away the stomach; such the rich,
That have abundance and enjoy it not. Shakespeare.

As appetite or stomach to meet is a sign of health in the body, so is this hunger in the soul a vital quality, an evidence of some life of grace in the heart;
whereas decay of appetite, and the no manner of stomach, is a most desperate prognostick. Hammond.

3. Inclination; liking.

He which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart. Shakespeare.

The unusual distance of time made it subject to every man's note, that it was an act against his stomach, and put upon him by necessity of state. Bacon.

The very trade went against his stomach. L'Estrange.

4. [Stomachus, Lat.] Anger; violence of temper.

Disdain he called was, and did disdain
To be so call'd, and who fo did him call:
Stern was his look, and full of stomach vain,
His portance terrible, and stature tall. Spenser.

Is 't near dinner time?—I would it were,
That you might kill your stomach on your meat,
And not upon your maid. Shakespeare.

Instead of trumpet and of drum,
That makes the warrior's stomach come. Butler.

5. Sullenness; resentment; stubbornness.

Some of the chiefest lady professed with greater stomach their judgments, that such a discipline was little better than popish tyranny disguised under a new form. Hooker.

They plainly saw, that when stomach doth strive with wit, the match is not equal. Hooker.

Whereby the ape in wondrous stomach wox,
Strongly encourag'd by the crafty fox. Spenser.

That nobles should such stomachs bear!
I myself fight not once in forty year. Shakespeare.

It stuck in the camel's stomach, that bulls should be armed with horns, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange.

Not courage, but stomach, that makes people brave rather than they will be. L'Estrange.

This sort of crying proceeding from pride, oblivion, and stomach, the will, where the fault lies, must be beat. Locke.

6. Pride; haughtiness.

Arius, a subtle-witted and a marvellous fair-spoken man, was discontented that one should be placed before him in honour, whose superior he thought himself in desert, because through envy and stomach prone unto contradiction. Hooker.

He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes. Shakespeare.

TO STOMACH. v. a. [stomachor, Latin.]

To resent; to remember with anger and malignity.

Believe not all; or, if you must believe,
Stomach not all. Shakespeare.

Jonathan loved David, and the people applauded him; only Saul *stomach*ed him, and therefore hated him. Hull.

The lion began to show his teeth, and to stomach
the affront. L'Estrange.

TO STOMACH. r. n. To be angry.

Let a man, though never so justly, oppose himself unto those that are disordered in their ways, and what one amongst them commonly doth not stomach at such contradiction, storm at reproach, and hate such as would reform them? Hooker.

STOMACHED. adj. [from stomach.] Filled with passions of resentment.

High stomach'd are they both, and full of ire;
In rage deaf as the sea, hasty as fire. Shakespeare.

STOMACHER. n. f. [from stomach.] An ornamental covering worn by women on the breast.

Golden quoifs and stomachers,
For my lads to give their dears. Shakespeare.

ation occasioned by an infarction and obstruction of the stomachick vessels through melancholy humours. Harvey.

By a cutarrh the stomachical ferment is vitiated. Flyer.

STOMACHICK. n. f. [from stomach.] A medicine for the stomach.

STOMACHLESS. adj. [stomach and less.]
Being without appetite.

STOMACHOUS. adj. [stomachofus, Latin.]
Stout; angry; sullen; obstinate. Obsolete.

That stranger knight in preference came,
And goodly salved them; but nought again
Him answered, as courtesy became;
But with stern looks, and stomachous disdain,
Gave signs of grudge and discontentment vain. Spenser.

STOND. n. f. [for stand.]

1. Post; station. Obsolete.

On th' other side, th' assieg'd castle's ward
Their steadfast stonds did mightily maintain. Spenser.

2. Stop; indisposition to proceed.

There be not stonds nor relivenets in a man's nature; but the wheels of his mind keep way with the wheels of his fortune. Bacon.

12. To leave no STONE unturned. To do every thing that can be done for the production or promotion of any effect.
Women, that left no stone unturn'd,
In which the cause might be concern'd,
Brought in their children's spoons and whistles,
To purchase swords, carbines, and pistols. Hudibras.
He crimes invented, left unturn'd no stone
To make my guilt appear, and hide his own. Dryden.

STONE. adj. Made of stone.
Present her at the lect,
Because she bought stone jugs, and no few'd quarts. Shakespeare.

TO STONE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pelt, or beat, or kill with stones.
These people be almost ready to stone me. Evans.

Crucifixion was a punishment unknown to the Jewish laws, among whom the stoning to death was the punishment for blasphemy. Stephens.

On partridge's wing; then, and flow my heart,
And mak' me out what I intend to do
A murder, which I thought a sacrifice. Shaksp.

STONERBARK. n.f. [Sanivraga anglicana.]
An herb. Ainsworth.

STONECHATTER. n.f. [rubetra, Latin.]
A bird.

STONECRAY. n.f. A distemper in hawks.

STONECROP. n.f. A sort of tree.
Stemecrop tree is a beautiful tree, but not common. Mortimer.

STONECUTTER. n.f. [from stone and cut- ter.] One whose trade is to hew stones.

A stonecutter's man had the vesicles of his lungs so stuffed with dust, that, in cutting, the knife went as if through a heap of sand. Derham.

My prosecutor provided me a monument at the stonecutter's, and would have erected it in the parish-church. Swift.

STONEFLY. n.f. A plant. Ainsworth.

STONEFLY. n.f. An insect. Ainsworth.

STONEFRUIT. n.f. [stone and fruit.] Fruit of which the seed is covered with a hard shell enveloped in the pulp.

We gathered ripe apricocks and ripe plums upon one tree, from which we expect some other sorts of stonefruit. Boyle.

STONEHAWK. n.f. [lithofalco, Lat.] A kind of hawk. Ainsworth.

STONEHORSE. n.f. [stone and horse.] A horse not castrated.

Where there is most arable land, stonehorses or geldings are more necessary. Mortimer.

STONEPIT. n.f. [stone and pit.] A quarry;
a pit where stones are dug.

There is one found in a ston pit. Woodward.

STONEPITCH. n.f. [from stone and pitch.]
Hard insipidated pitch.

The Egyptian mummies are reported to be as hard as stonepitch. Bacon.

bird. Ainsworth.

STONEPICKLE. n.f. [mascinata.] A bird.
Ainsworth.

STONWORK. n.f. [stone and work.] Building of stone.

They make two walls with flat stones, and fill the space with earth, and so they continue the stonwork. Mortimer.

STONINESS. n.f. [from stone.]

1. The quality of having many stones.
The name Hexton owes its original to the stoni- ness of the place. Hearne.

Small gravel or stoniness is found therein.
Mortimer.

2. Hardness of mind.

He hath some stonyness at the bottom. Hammond.

STONY. adj. [from stone.]

1. Made of stone.

Nor stone tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shaksp.

With love's light wings did I o'erperch these walls;

For stone limits cannot hold love out. Shakspere.

Nor slept the winds
Within their stone caves, but rush'd abroad

From the four hinges of the world, and fell
On the vast wilderness, whose tallest pines,

Though rooted deep as high and sturdiest oaks,
Bow'd their stiff necks, laden with stormy blasts,

Or torn up sheer. Milton.

Here the marshy grounds approach your fields,
And there the soil a stone harvest yields. Dryden.

As in spires he stood, he turn'd to stone;
The stone snake retain'd the figure still his own.

They suppose these bodies to be only water petrified, or converted into these sparry or stone icicles.
Woodward.

2. Abounding with stones.
From the stone Menalus
Bring your flocks, and live with us. Milton.

3. Petrified.

Now let the stone dart of senseless cold
Pierce to my heart, and pass through every side. Spenser.

4. Hard; inflexible; unrelenting.

The stone hardness of too many patrons hearts,
not touched with any feeling in this case. Hooker.

Thou art come to answer
A stone adversary, an inhuman wretch
Un capable of pity. Shakspere.

Eight yards of uneven ground is three score and ten miles a-foot with me, and the stone-hearted villains know it. Shakspere.

At this sight
My heart is turn'd to stone; and, while 'tis mine,
It shall be stone. Shakspere.

I will clear their senses dark,
What may suffice, and soften stone hearts,
To pray, repent, and bring obedience due. Milton.

Ludiff's reuce, clad in widow's guise,
All sortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stone bowels melt,
In those who never pity felt? Swift.

STOOD. The preterit of To stand.

Adam, at the news,
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood. Milton.

STOOL. n.f. [stols, Gothick; stool, Sax. stool, Dutch.]

1. A seat without a back, so distinguished from a chair.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back. Watts.

Thou fearful fool,
Why takest not of the same fruit of gold?
Ne sittest down on that same silver stool,
To rest thy weary person in the shadow cold? Spenser.

Now which were wise, and which were fools?
Poor Alma sits between two stools;
The more she reads, the more perplex. Prior.

2. Evacuation by purgative medicines.

There be medicines that move stools, and not urine; some other urine, and not stools: those that purge by stool, are such as enter not at all, or little, into the melentery veins; but either at the first are not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts; or else are afterwards rejected by the melentery veins, and so turn likewise downwards to the guts. Bacon.

The peristaltick motion, or repeated changes of contraction and dilatation, is not in the lower guts, else one would have a continual needing of going to stool. Arbuthnot.

3. STOOT of Repentance, or Cutty Stool, in the kirks of Scotland, is somewhat analogous to the pillory. It is elevated above the congregation. In some places there may be a seat in it; but it is generally without, and the person stands therein, who has been guilty of fornication;
for three Sundays, in the forenoon;
and after sermon is called upon by name and surname, the beadle or kirk-officer bringing the offender, if refractory, forward to his post; and then the preacher proceeds to admonition. Here too are set to publick view adulterers; only these are habited in a coarse canvas, analogous to a hairy or monastick vest, with a hood to it, which they call the sack, or sackcloth; and that every Sunday throughout a year, or longer.

Unequal and unreasonable judgment of things, brings many a great man to the stool of repentance.
L'Estrange.

STOOLBALL. n.f. [stool and ball.] A play where balls are driven from stool to stool.

While Betty dances on the green,
And Susan is at stoolball seen, Prior.

To STOOP. v.n. [stropian, Sax. stuppen,
Dutch.]

1. To bend down; to bend forward.

Like unto the boughs of this tree; he bended downward, and stooped toward the earth. Raleigh.

2. To lean forward standing or walking.

When Pelopidas and Iphiclus were sent to Artaxerxes, Pelopidas did nothing unworthy; but Iphic-lus let fall his ring to the ground, and, stooping for that, was thought to make his adoration. Stillingfl.

He stooping open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib. Milton.

3. To yield; to bend; to submit.

I am the son of Henry the fifth,
Who made the dauphin and the French to stoop.
Shakspere.

Mighty in her ships stood Carthage long,
And swept the riches of the world from far;
Yet stoop'd to Rome, less wealthy, but more strong.
Dryden.

4. To descend from rank or dignity.

Where men of great wealth stoop to husbandry,
it multiplieth riches exceedingly. Bacon.

He that condescended so far, and stooped so low, to invite and to bring us to heaven, will not refuse us a gracious reception there. Boyle.

5. To yield; to be inferiour.

Death his death-wound shall then receive,
And stoop inglorious. Milton.

These are arts, my prince,
In which your Zama does not stoop to Rome. Addis.

6. To sink from resolution or superiority; to condescend.

They, whose authority is required unto the satisfying of your demand, do think it both dangerous to admit such concurrence of divided minds; and un-meet that their laws, which, being once solemnly established, are to exact obedience of all men, and to constrain thereunto, should so far stoop as to hold themselves in suspense from taking any effect upon you, till some disputer can persuade you to be obedient. Hooker.

7. To come down on prey as a falcon.

The bird of Jove stoop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayest plume before him drove. Mit.

8. To alight from the wing.

Satan ready now
To stoop with wearied wings and willing feet,
On the bare outside of this world. Milton.

Twelve swans behold in beauteous order move,
And stoop with closing pinions from above. Dryden.

9. To sink to a lower place.

Cowering low
With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing.
Milton.

STOOP. n.f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of stooping; inclination downward.

2. Descent from dignity or superiority.

Can any loyal subject see
With patience such a stoop from sovereignty?
An ocean pour'd upon a narrow brook? Dryden.

3. Fall of a bird upon his prey.

Now will I wander through the air,
Mount, make a stoop at every fair. Waller.

An eagle made a stoop at him in the middle of his exaltation, and carried him away. L'Estrange.

4. [stoppa, Sax. stoope, Dutch.] A vessel of liquor.

Come, lieutenant, I have a stoop of wine; and here without are a brace of gallants, that would fain have a measure to the health of Othello.
Shakspere.

There is nothing more in me, fir, but may be squeezed out without racking, only a stoop or two of wine. Denham.

A caldron of fat beef, and stoop of ale,
On the huzzing mob shall more prevail,
Than if you give them, with the nicest art,
Ragouls of peacocks brains, or filbert tart. King.

STOOPINGLY. adv. [from stooping.] With inclination downward.

Nani was noted to tread softly, to walk stoop- ingly, and raise himself from benches with laborious gesture. Watson.

To STOP. v.a. [stopper, French; stoppare, Italian; stoppen, Dutch.]

1. To hinder from progressive motion.

From the oracle
They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel lead
Shall stop or spare me. Shakespeare.

2. To hinder from successive operation.

Can any dress and a way
To stop the approaches of decay,
And mend a ruin'd face? Dorset.

3. To hinder from any change of state, whether to better or worse.

4. To hinder from action or practice.
Friend, 'tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd. Shakespeare.

As the truth of Christ is in me, no man shall stop me of this boasting. 2 Corinthians.

5. To put an end to the motion or action of any thing; to intercept.

Almost tall,
Pierc'd with an arrow from the distant war:
Fix'd in his throat the flying weapon stood,
And stopp'd his breath, and drank his vital blood. Dryden.

6. To repress; to suspend.

Every bold sinner, when about to engage in the commission of any known sin, should arrest his conscience, and stop the execution of his purpose with this question: Do I believe that God has denounced death to such a practice, or do I not? South.

7. To suppress.

He, on occasion of stopping my play, did me a good office at court, by representing it as long ago designed. Dryden.

8. To regulate musical strings with the fingers.

In instruments of strings, if you stop a string high, whereby it hath less scope to tremble, the sound is more treble, but yet more dead. Bacon.

9. To close an aperture.

Smite every fenced city, stop all wells of water, and mar land with stones. 2 Kings.

They pulled away the shoulder, and stopp'd their ears, that they should not hear. Zeck.

A hawk's bell, the hole stopp'd up, hung by a thread within a bottle-glass, and stop the glass close with wax. Bacon.

His majesty stopp'd a leak that did much harm.
Bacon.

Stoppings and suffocations are dangerous in the body. Bacon.

They first raised an army with this design, to stop my mouth, or force my content. King Charles.

Cellius gives a precept about bleeding, that when the blood is good, which is to be judged by the colour, that immediately the vein should be stopp'd.
Arbuthnot.

10. To obstruct; to encumber.

Mountains of ice that stop the imagin'd way.
Milton.

11. To garnish with proper punctuation.

To STOP. v. n.

1. To cease to go forward.

Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
Springs out into full gait, then stops again. Shaks.

When men pursue their thoughts of space, they stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end. Locke.

If the rude throng pour on with furious pace,
And hap to break thee from a friend's embrace,
Stop short, nor struggle through. Gay.

2. To cease from any course of action.

Encroachments are made by degrees from one step to another; and the best time to stop is at the beginning. Leisley.

STOP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cessation of progressive motion.

Thought's the slave of time, and life time's fool;
And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. Shakespeare.

The margold, whose courtier's face
Echoes the sun, and doth unlase
Her at his rise, at his full stop Picks and shuts up her gaudy stop. Cleveland.

A lion, ranging for his prey, made a stop on a sudden, at a hideous yelling noise which startled him. L'Estrange.

2. Hindrance of progress; obstruction; act of stopping.

In weak and tender minds we little know what misery this strict opinion would breed, besides the stops it would make in the whole course of all men's lives and actions. Hooker.

These gates are not sufficient for the communication between the walled city and its suburbs, as daily appears by the stops and embarrassments of coaches near both these gates. Graunt.

My praise the Fabii claim,
And thou, great hero, greatest of thy name,
Ordain'd in war to save the sinking state,
And, by delays, to put a stop to fate. Dryden.

Occult qualities put a stop to the improvement of natural philosophy, and therefore have been rejected. Newton.

Brokers hinder trade, by making the circuit which the money goes larger, and in that circuit more stops, so that the returns must necessarily be slower and fainter. Locke.

Female zeal, though proceeding from so good a principle, if we may believe the French historians, often put a stop to the proceedings of their kings,
which might have ended in a reformation. Addison.

3. Repression; hindrance of operation.

'Tis a great step towards the mastery of our desires, to give this stop to them, and shut them up in silence. Locke.

4. Cessation of action.

Look you to the guard to-night:
Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop,
Not to outstrip discretion. Shakespeare.

5. Interruption.

Thou art full of love and honesty,
And weight'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath;
Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more. Shakespeare.

6. Prohibition of sale.

If they should open a war, they foresee the consumption France must fall into by the stop of their wine and salts, wholly taken off by our two nations. Temple.

7. That which obstructs; obstacle; impediment.

The proud Dueffa, full of wrathful spight
And fierce disdain to be affronted so, Inforc'd her purple beast with all her might,
That stop out of the way to overthrow. Spenser.

On indeed they went: but O! not far;
A fatal stop travers'd their headlong course. Daniel.

Blessed be that God who cast rubs, stops, and hindrances in my way, when I was attempting the commission of such a sin. South.

8. Instrument by which the sounds of wind music are regulated.

You would play upon me, you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery. Shakespeare.

Blest are those,
Whose blood and judgment are so well commingled,
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger
To sound what stop she please. Shakespeare.

The harp
Had work, and rested not; the solemn pipe,
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milton.

The sound
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard of harp and organ; and who mov'd
Their stops, and chords, was seen; his volant touch Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursued transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.

A variety of strings may be observed on their harps, and of stops on their tibias; which shews the little foundation that such writers have gone upon, who, from a short passage in a classic author, have determined the precise shape of the ancient musical instruments, with the exact number of their pipes, strings, and stops. Addison.

9. Regulation of musical chords by the fingers.

The further a string is strained, the less super-straining goeth to a note; for it requires good winding of a string before it will make any note at all; and in the stops of lutes, the higher they go,
the less distance is between the frets. Bacon.

10. The act of applying the stops in medicine.

The organ found a time survives the stop.
Before it doth the dying note give up. Daniel.

11. A point in writing, by which sentences are distinguished.

Even the iron-pointed pen,
That notes the tragick dooms of men,
Wet with tears still'd from the eyes
Of the stony destinies,
Would have learn'd a softer style,
And have been ashamed to spoil
His life's sweet story by the haste
Of a cruel stop ill-plac'd. Crahan.

STO'P'COCK. n. f. [stop and cock.] A pipe made to let out liquor, stopp'd by a turning cock.

No man could spit from him without it, but would drivel like some paralytick or fool; the tongue being as a stopcock to the air, till upon its removal the spittle is driven away. Grew.

STO'P'GAP. n. f. [from stop and gap.] Something substituted; a temporary expedient.

STO'P'PAGE. n. f. [from stop.] The act of stopping; the state of being stopp'd.

The effects are a stoppage of circulation by too great a weight upon the heart, and suffocation. Arbuthnot.

The stoppage of a cough, or spitting, increases phlegm in the stomach. Floyer.

STO'P'PLE or Stopper. n. f. [from stop.] That by which any hole, or the mouth of any vessel, is filled up.

Bottles swung, or carried in a wheel-barrow upon rough ground, fill not full, but leave some air; for if the liquor come close to the stopple, it cannot flower. Bacon.

There were no stops or stopples made for the ears, that any loud or sharp noise might awaken it, as also a soft and gentle murmur provoke it to sleep. Ray.

STO'RAX. n. f. [styrax, Latin.]

1. A plant.

2. A resinous and odoriferous gum.

I yielded a pleasant odour like the best myrra,
as galbanum, and sweet storax. Ecclesiasticus.

STORE. n. f. [stór, in old Swedish and Runick, is much, and is prefixed to other words to intend their signification; stór, Danish; stoor, Islandick, is great. The Teutonic dialects nearer to English seem not to have retained this word.]

1. Large number; large quantity; plenty.

The ships are fraught with store of victuals, and good quantity of treasure. Bacon.

Nones yet, but store hereafter from the earth
Up hither like aerial vapours flew,
Of all things transitory and vain, when sin,
With vanity had fill'd the works of men. Milton.

Jove grant me length of life, and years good store
Heap on my bended back. Dryden.

2. A stock accumulated; a supply hoarded.

We liv'd supine amidst our flowing store,
We slept securely, and we dreamt of more. Dryden.

Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame:
The sweet enthusiast from her sacred store
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds. Dryden.

Thee, goddess, thee, Britannia's idle adores:
How has the oft exhausted all her stores!
How oft in fields of death thy presence sought,
Nor thinks the mighty prize too dearly bought! Addison.

Their minds are richly fraught
With philosophick stores. Thomson.

3. The state of being accumulated; hoard.
Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures? Deuteronomy.

4. Storehouse; magazine.

Sulphurous and nitrous steam,
Concocted and adulter'd, they reduc'd
To blacked grain, and into store convey'd. Milton.
Store. adj. Hoarded; laid up; accumulated.

What floods of treasure have flowed into Europe by that action, so that the cause of christianity is raised since twenty times told: of this treasure the gold was accumulate and store treasure; but the silver is full growing. Bacon.

TO STORE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish; to replenish.

Wife Plato said the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.
Her face with thousand beauties bless'd;
Her mind with thousand virtues stor'd;
Her power with boundless joy confest,
Her person only not ador'd. Prior.

2. To stock against a future time.

Some were of opinion that it were best to stay where they were, until more aid and store of victuals were come; but others said the enemy were but barely stor'd with victuals, and therefore could not long hold out. Knollys.

One having stor'd a pond of four acres with carps, tench, and other fish, and only put in two small pikes, at seven years end, upon the draught, not one fish was left, but the two pikes grown to an excessive bigness. Hale.

The mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, which I call ideas of reflection. Locke.

To store the vessel let the care be mine
With water from the rocks, and rosy wine,
And life-sustaining bread. Pope.

3. To lay up; to hoard.

Let the main part of the corn be a common stock, laid in and stor'd up, and then delivered out in proportion. Bacon.

STOREHOUSE. n. s. [store and house.]

1. Magazine; treasury; place in which things are hoarded and deposited against a time of use.

By us it is willingly confessed, that the scripture of God is a storehouse abounding with inestimable treasures of wisdom and knowledge, in many kinds over and above things in this kind barely necessary. Hooker.

Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses cramm'd with grain! Shakespeare.
Joseph opened all the storehouses, and sold unto the Egyptians. Genesis.

To these high powers a storehouse doth pertain,
Where they all arts and gen'ral reasons lay;
Which in the soul, ev'n after death, remain,
And no Lethæan blood can wash away. Davies.
My heart hath been a storehouse long of things
And sayings laid up, portending strange events. Milton.

The image of God was resplendent in man's practical understanding, that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South.

As many different sounds as can be made by single articulations, so many letters there are in the storehouse of nature. Holder.

2. A great mass deposited.

They greatly joyed merry tales to feign,
Of which a storehouse did with her remain. F. Qu.
Store. n. s. [from store.] One who lays up.

STORED. adj. [from story.] Furnished with stories; adorned with historical pictures.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloisters pale,
And love the high embowed roof,
With antick pillar, massy proof;
And storied windows, richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light.
How greedy mission or impetuous wife
The trophied arches, storied halls, invade. Pope.

STORK. n. s. [stork, Saxon; cicoula, Lat.]
A bird of passage, famous for the regularity of its departure.

Its beak and legs are long and red; it feeds upon serpents, frogs, and insects: its plumage would be quite white, were not the extremity of its wings, and also some part of its head and thighs, black:
it sits for thirty days, and lays but four eggs:
they go away in the middle of August, and return in spring. Calmct.

The stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times. Jeremiah.

Who bid the stork, Columbus like, explore Heavens not his own, and worlds unknown before?
Who calls the council, states the certain day,
Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way?
Pope.

STORKSBILL. n. s. [geranium, Lat.] An herb. Ansforth.

STORM. n. s. [storm, Welsh; storun,
Saxon; storm, Dutch; stormo, Italian.]

1. A tempest; a commotion of the elements.

Turn thy rudder hitherward a while,
Here may thy storm-beat vessel safely ride. Spenser.
We hear this fearful tempest sing.
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm. Shakespeare.

Them the upstays, and the while Herself, though sweetly unsupported flower,
From her base prop to far, and storm to nigh.

Sulphurous hail shot after us in storm. Milton.
Then stay, my child! storms beat, and rolls the main; Milton.

Oh beat those storms, and roll the seas, in vain!
Pope.

2. Assault on a fortified place.

How by storm the walls were won,
Or how the victor sack'd and burnt the town. Dryd.

3. Commotion; sedition; tumult; clamour; bufile.

Whilst I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm. Shaksp.
Her sister

Began to scold and raise up such a storm,
That mortal ears might hardly endure the din. Shaksp.

4. Affliction; calamity; distress.

A brave man struggling in the storms of fate. Pope.

5. Violence; vehemence; tumultuous force.
As oft as we are delivered from those either imminent or present calamities, against the storm and tempest whereof we all instantly craved favour from above, let it be a question what we should render unto God for his blessings, universally, sensibly, and extraordinarily bestowed. Hooker.

TO STORM. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack by open force.

From ploughs and harrows sent to seek renown,
They fight in fields, and storm the shaken town. Dryden.

There the brazen tow'r was storm'd of old,
When Jove descended in almighty gold. Pope.

TO STORM. v. n.

1. To raise tempests.
So now he storms with many a sturdy squire,
So now his blustering blast each coast doth squire. Spenser.

2. To rage; to fume; to be loudly angry.
Hoarse, and all in rage,
As inock'd they storm. Milton.

When you return, the master storms, the lady scolds. Swift.

While thus they rail, and scold, and storm
It passes but for common form. Swift.

STORMY. adj. [from storm.]

1. Tempestuous.
Bellowing clouds burst with a stormy found,
And with an armed winter strew the ground. Addison.

The tender apples, from their parents rent
By stormy flocks, must not neglected lie. Philips.

2. Violent; passionate.

STORY. n. s. [storp, Saxon; storie, Dut.
storia, Italian; istoria.]

1. History; account of things past.

The fable of the dividing of the world between the three sons of Saturn, arose from the true story of the dividing of the earth between the three brethren, the sons of Noah. Balgh.

These I have heard relating what was done
Ere my remembrance: now hear me relate
My story, which perhaps thou hast not heard. Milt.

The four great monarchies make the subject of ancient story, and are related by the Greek and Latin authors. Temple.

Matters of fact, concerning times, places, persons, actions, which depend upon story, and the relation of others, these things are not capable of being proved by such scientific principles. Wilkins.

Governments that once made such a noise, as founded upon the deepest counsels and the strongest force, yet by some slight miscarriage, which let in ruin upon them, are now so utterly extinct, that nothing remains of them but a name; nor are there the least traces of them to be found, but only in story. South.

2. Small tale; petty narrative; account of a single incident.

In the road between Berne and Soleure, a monument erected by the republic of Berne tells us the story of an Englishman not to be met with in any of our own writers. Addison.

3. An idle or trifling tale; a petty fiction.

Their flaws and faults would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire, Shakespeare.

This scene had some bold Greek or British bard
Beheld of old, what stories had we heard
Of fairies, satyrs, and the nymphs their dames,
Then tents, their revels, and their am'rous flames!
Denham.

My maid left on the table one of her story books, which I found full of strange impertinence, of poor servants who came to be ladies. Swift.

4. [storp, place, Saxon.] A floor; a flight of rooms.

Avoid enormous heights of seven stories, and the contrary fault of low distended fronts. Wotton.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloris
Might raise a house about two stories;
A lyric ode would flate; a catch
Would tile; an epigram would thatch. Swift.

TO STORY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tell in history; to relate.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing. Shaksp.

'Tis not vain or fabulous
What the sage poets, taught by th' heavenly muse,
Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras and enchanted isles,
And ridged rocks whose entrance leads to hell. Milton.

It is storied of the brazen Colossus, in the island of Rhodes, that it was seventy cubits high; the thumbs of it being too big, that no man could grasp one of them with both his arms. Wilkins.

Recite them, nor in erring pity fear
To wound with storied griefs the filial ear. Pope.

2. To range one under another.

Because all the parts of an undisturbed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed or storied according to the difference of it, any concretion that can be supposed to be naturally and mechanically made in such a fluid, must have a like structure of its several parts; that is, either be all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis. Hentley.

STORYTELLER. n. s. [story and tell.] One who relates tales in conversation; a haf-torian, in contempt.

In such a satire all would seek a share,
And every fool will fancy he is there;
Old storytellers too must pine and die,
To see their antiquated wit laid by;
Like her, who mis'd her name in a harp-song,
And griev'd to find herself decay'd to song. Dryden.
Company will be no longer pestered with dull,
dry, tedious storytellers. Swift.

STOVE. n. s. [stog, Islandick, a fire-place;
stova, Saxon; estuve, French; stove,
Dutch.]

1. A hothouse; a place artificially made warm.

Fishermen who make holes in the ice, to dip up such fish with their nets as resort thither for breathing, light on swallows congregated in clouds of a slimy substance, and carrying them home to their stoves, the warmth recovereth them to life and flight.

Stoves, which could autumn of cold winter make, Egyptians in autumn to bring winter back. Bees. The heat which arises out of the lesser spiracles brings forth nitre and sulphur; some of which it affixes to the tops and sides of the grottoes, which are usually so hot as to serve for natural stoves or sweating-vaults. Woodward. The most proper place for onion is a stove. Wiseman.

2. A place in which fire is made, and by which heat is communicated.

If the season prove exceeding piercing, in your great house kindle some charcoals; and when they have done smoking, put them into a hole sunk a little into the floor, about the middle of it. This is the safest stove. Evelyn.

To STOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To keep warm in a house artificially heated.

For December, January, and the latter part of November, take such things as are green all winter; orange trees, lemon trees, and myrtles, if they be stowed; and sweet marjoram warm set. Bacon.

To STOUND. v. n. [stunde, I grieved, I standick.]

1. To be in pain or sorrow. Out of use.

2. For stunned.

STOUND. st. [from the verb.]

1. Sorrow; grief; mishap. Out of use. The Scots retain it.

The fox his copesinate found, To whom complaining his unhappy stound, He with him stew'd some better chance to find. Spenser.

2. Astonishment; amazement.

Thus we stood, as in a stound, And wet with tears, like dew, the ground. Gay.

3. Hour; time; season.

STOUR. n. f. [stur, Runick, a battle; stouran, Saxon, to disturb.] Assault; incursion; tumult. Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stour, The faulty souls from thence brought to his heav'nly bow'r. Fairy Queen.

Love, that long since has to thy mighty pow'r Perforce subdued my poor captiv'd heart, And raging now therein with restless stours, Dost tyrannize in every weaker part. Spenser.

The giant struck to mainly merciless, That could have overthrown a stony tower; And, were not heav'nly grace that him did bless, He had been pouldered all as thin as flower. But he was wary of that deadly stoure. Spenser.

STOUT. adj. [stout, Dutch; stolz, proud, German; stautan, Gothick, is to strike.]

1. Strong; lusty; valiant.

When I was young, I do remember how my father said, A stouter champion never handled sword. Shakspeare. Some captain of the land or fleet, Stout of his hands, but of a soldier's wit, Cries, I have sense to serve my turn, in store, And he's a rascal who pretends to more. Dryden.

2. Brave; bold; intrepid. The stout-hearted are spoiled. Psalms. He lost the character of a bold, stout, and magnanimous man, which he had been long reputed to be. Clarendon.

3. Obstinate; pertinacious; resolute; proud. The lords all stand, To clear their cause, most resolutely stout. Daniel.

There virtue and stout honour paid the guards, Those only friends that could not be debarr'd. Bushyft.

4. Strong; firm.

The stoutest vessel to the storm gave way, And suck'd through loosn'd planks the rushing sea. Dryden.

STOUT. n. f. A cant name for strong beer.

Should but his muse descending drop A slice of bread and mutton chop, Or kindly, when his credit's out, Surprise him with a pint of stout; Exalted in his mighty mind, He flies and leaves the stars behind. Swift.

STOUTLY. adv. [from stout.] Lustily; boldly; obstinately.

STOUTNESS. n. f. [from stout.]

1. Strength; valour.

2. Boldness; fortitude.

His bashfulness in youth was the very true sign of his virtue and stoutness after. Ascham.

3. Obstinacy; stubbornness.

Come all to ruin, let Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear Thy dangerous stoutness: for I mock at death With as stout heart as thou. Shakspeare.

To STOW. v. a. [stow, Saxon; stoc, old Frisick, a place; stowen, Dutch, to lay up.] To lay up; to repose in order; to lay in the proper place.

Foul thief! where hast thou stow'd my daughter? Shakspeare.

STOWAGE. n. f. [from stow.]

1. Room for laying up.

In every vessel is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion, or merchandise of as great a value. Addison.

2. The state of being laid up.

'Tis plate of rare device, and jewels Of rich and exquisite form; their value's great; And I am something curious, being strange, To have them in safe stowage. Shakspeare.

3. Money paid for stowing of goods.

STOWE, STOE, whether singly or jointly, are the same with the Saxon stow, a place. Gibson.

STRA'BISM. n. f. [strabism, Fr. strabismus, Latin.] A squinting; act of looking askint.

To STRA'DDLE. v. n. [supposed to come from striddle or stride.] To stand or walk with the feet removed far from each other to the right and left; to part the legs wide.

Let man survey himself, divested of artificial charms, and he will find himself a forked straddling animal, with bandy legs. Arbuthnot and Pope.

To STRA'GGLE. v. a. [Of this word no etymology is known: it is probably a frequentative of stray, from stravviare, Italian, of extra viam, Latin.]

1. To wander without any certain direction; to rove; to ramble.

But stay; like one that thinks to bring his friend A mile or two, and sees the journey's end, I straggle on too far. Suchling.

A wolf spied out a straggling kid, and pursued him. L'Estrange.

Children, even when they endeavour their utmost, cannot keep their minds from straggling. Locke.

2. To wander difperedly.

He likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity. Shakspeare.

3. To exuberate; to shoot too far.

Were they content to prune the lavish vine Of straggling branches, and improve the wine. Trim off the small superfluous branches on each side of the hedge, that straggle too far out. Mortimer.

4. To be dispersed; to be apart from any main body; to stand single.

Having passed the Syrens, they came between Scylla and Charybdis, and the straggling rocks, which seemed to call out great store of flames and smoke. Raleigh.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close In streets, but here and there a straggling house. Yet still he was at hand. Dryden.

STRA'GLER. n. f. [from straggle.]

1. A wanderer; a rover; one who forsakes his company; one who rambles without any settled direction.

The last should keep the countries from passage of stragglers from those parts, whence they use to come forth, and oftentimes use to work much mischief. Spenser.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again, Lash hence these over-weening rags of France, These famish'd beggars. Shakspeare.

Bottles missing are supposed to be half stolen by stragglers, and the other half broken. Swift.

2. Any thing that pushes beyond the rest, or stands single.

Let thy hand supply the pruning knife, And crop luxuriant stragglers, nor be loth To strip the branches of their leafy growth. Dryden.

His pruning hook corrects the vines, And the loose stragglers to their ranks confines. Pope.

STRAIGHT. adj. [strack, old Dutch. It is well observed by Ainsworth, that for not crooked we ought to write straight, and for narrow, strait; but for freight, which is sometimes found, there is no good authority.]

1. Not crooked; right.

Beauty made barren the swell'd boast Of him that best could speak; feature, laming The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva. Shakspeare.

A hunter's horn and cornet is oblique; yet they have likewise straight horns; which, if they be of the same bore with the oblique, differ little in sound. Save that the straight require somewhat a stronger blast. Bacon.

There are many several sorts of crooked lines, but there is one only which is straight. Dryden.

Water and air the varied form confound; The straight looks crooked, and the square grows round. Prior.

When I see a fruit staff appear crooked while half under the water, the water gives me a false idea. Bacon.

2. Narrow; close. This should properly be strait. [stroit, Fr. See STRAIT.]

Queen Elizabeth used to say of her instructions to great officers, that they were like to garners straight at the first putting on, but did by and by wear loose enough. Bacon.

3. Tense; tight. Of this sense it is doubtful whether it belongs to strait, chast, narrow; or to strait, not crooked. Pull the cord straight, may mean, draw it till it has no flexure; tie it strait about you, may mean, draw it into a narrower compass. This ambiguity has perhaps confounded the orthography.

STRAIGHT. adv. [straz, Danish; strait, Dutch.] Immediately; directly. Thus Straight is naturally derived from the adjective, as a straight line is the shortest line between two points.

If the devil come and roar for them, I will not fend them. I will after straight, And tell him so. Shakespeare.

Those stinks which the nostrils straight abhor and expel, are not the most pernicious. Bacon.

With chalk I first describe a circle here, Where the æthereal spirits must appear: Come in, come in: for here they will be strait: Around, around the place I fumigate. Dryden.

I know thy generous temper well; Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it, It straight takes fire, and mounts into a blaze. Addison.

To STRAIGHTEN. v. a. [from straight.]

1. To make not crooked; to make straight. A crooked stick is not straightened, except it be as far bent on the clean contrary side. Hooker.

Ourselves being so apt to err, the only way which we have to straighten our paths is, by following the rule of his will, whose footsteps naturally are right. Hooker.

2. To make tense; to tighten.

STRAIGHTLY. adv. [from straight.]

1. In a right line; not crookedly.

2. Tightly; with tension.

STRAIGHTNESS. n. f. [from straight.]

1. Rectitude; the contrary to crookedness. Some are for masts, as fir and pine, because of their length and straightness. Bacon.

2. Tension; tightness.

STRAIGHTWAY. adv. [straight and way.]

Our words flow from us in a smooth continued stream, without those strainings of the voice, motions of the body, and majesty of the hand, which are so much celebrated in the orators of Greece and Rome. Atterbury.

Strain'd to the root, the slooping forest pours A rustling shower of yet untimely leaves. Thompson.

6. To make straight or tense. A bigger string more strained, and a lesser string less strained, may fall into the same tone. Bacon.

Thou, the more he varies forms, beware, To strain his letters with a stricter care. Dryden.

7. To push beyond the proper extent. See they suffer death; But in their deaths remember they are men, Strain not the laws to make their torture grievous. Addison.

There can be no other meaning in this expression, however some may pretend to strain it. Swift.

Your way is to wrest and strain some principles, maintained both by them and me, to a sense repugnant with their other known doctrines. Hutchinson.

8. To force; to constrain; to make uneasy or unnatural. The lark sings so out of tune, Straining harsh discords and unpleasing sharps. Shakespeare.

He talks and plays with Fatima, but his worth Is forc'd and strained: in his looks appears A wild distracted fierceness. Denham.

To STRAIN. v. n.

1. To make violent efforts. To build his fortune I will strain a little, For 'tis a bond in men. Shakespeare.

German; brada, Spanish and Italian;
stiede, Danish; stract, Dutch; stratum,
Latin.]

1. A way, properly a paved way between two rows of houses.

He led us through fair streets, and all the way
we went there were gathered people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon

The streets are no larger than alleys. Saunders
When night

Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, down with insolence and wine;
Within the streets of Sodom. Milton

The Italians, say the ancients, always considered the situation of a building, whether it were high or low, in an open square, or in a narrow street, and more or less devoted from their rule of art. Addison

When you battle with some crony servant in the fame street, leave your own street-door open. Swift

2. Proverbially, a public place.

That there be no leading into captivity, and no complaining in our streets. Psalms

Our public ways would be so crowded, that we should want street-room. Spectator

Let us reflect upon what we daily see practised in the world; and can we believe, if an apostle of Christ appeared in our streets he would retract his censure, and command us to be conformable to the world? Rogers

STREETWALKER. n. f. [street and walk.]

A common prostitute, that offers herself to sale in the open street.

STRENGTH. n. f. [strengh, Saxon.]

1. Force; vigour; power of the body.

But strength is in truth divided, and from just, laudable, nought merits but disparage. Milton

Thou must outlive
Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change

To wither'd, weak, and grey. Milton

Th' insulting Trojans came,
And menace us with force, our fleet with flame:
Was it the strength of this tongue-valiant lord,
In that black hour, that sav'd you from the sword? Dryden

2. Power of endurance; firmness; durability; toughness; hardness.

Not founded on the brittle strength of bones. Milton

Firm Dorick pillars found the solid base,
The fair Corinthian crown the higher space,
And all below is strength, and all above is grace. Dryden

3. Vigour of any kind; power of any kind.

Strength there must be either of love or war, even such contrary ways leading to the same unity. Holiday

God, in all things wise and just,
Hinder'd not Satan to attempt the mind
Of man, with strength entire and free-will arm'd. Milton

This act Shall crush the strength of Satan. Milton

4. Power of resistance; sureness; firmness.

Our cattle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn. Shakespeare

Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress,
My only strength and stay. Milton

6. Power of mind; force of any mental faculty.

Antioch's large views, acuteness and penetration of thought, and strength of judgment, few have equalled. Locke

He enjoyed the greatest strength of good sense, and the most exquisite taste of poeasies. Addison
We, like friendly colours, found our hearts unite,
And each from each contract new strength and light. Pope

7. Spirit; animation.

methinks I feel new strength within me rise,
Wings growing, and dominion given. Milton

Adam and first matron live
Had ended now their orisons, and found Strength added from above, new hope to spring
Out of despair. Milton

8. Vigour of writing; nervous diction; force, opposed to softness, in writing or painting.

Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know
What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow;
And praise the airy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join. Pope

Caracci's strength, Coreggio's softer line,
Paulo's free stroke, and Titian's warmth divine. Pope

9. Potency of liquors.

10. Fortification; fortrefs.
The rudiments of talking should not only be retarded by the guard of our heart, but fenced in by certain strengths placed in the mouth. Ben Jonson

He thought
This inaccessible high strength to have seiz'd. Milt.
Betray'd in all his strength, the wood belet:
All instruments, all arts, of ruin met. Denham

What they boded would be a mischief to us, you are providing, shall be one of our principal strengths. Spratt

12. Legal force; validity; security.
13. Confidence imparted.
Certain services were due from the soldier to his captain, and from the captain to the prince; and upon the strength of such tenures, in after times, the descendants of these people and their kings
did subsist and make their wars. Davenant

The allies, after a successful summer, are too apt, upon the strength of it, to neglect their preparations for the ensuing campaign. Addison

14. Armament; force; power.
What is his strength by land? Shakespeare Nor was there any other strength designed to attend about his highness than one regiment. Clarendon

15. Persuasive prevalence; argumentative force.
This presupposed, it may then stand very well with strength and soundness of reason, thus to answer. Hooker

Edward's happy order'd reign most fertile breeds
Plenty of mighty spirits, to strength his state. Daniel

To STRENGTHEN. v. a. [from strength.]

1. To make strong.

2. To confirm; to establish.
Authority is by nothing so much strengthened and confirmed as by custom; for no man easily disfruits the things which he and all men have been always bred up to. Temple

Three, bold Longinus! all the Nine inspire,
And bid'st your crutch with a poet's fire:
An ardent judge, who, zealous in his truth,
With warmth gives sentence, yet is always just;
Whose own example strengthens all his laws,
And is himself that great tubline he draws. Pope

If it were true that women were thus naturally vain and light, then how much more blameable is that education, which seems contrived to strengthen and increase this folly. Law

3. To animate; to fix in resolution.

Let us rise up and build: so they strengthened their hands for this work. Nehemiah

Charge Joshua, and encourage him, and strengthen him. Deuteronomy

They tug at every oar, and every stretcher bends.
Dryden.

To STREW. v. a. [The orthography of this word is doubtful. It is sometimes written strew, and sometimes strow; I have taken both: Skinner proposes strow, and Junius writes strow. Their reasons will appear in the word from which it may be derived.

Straw, Gothick; stroyen, Dutch;
repeccan, Saxon; strewen, German;
strow, Danish. Perhaps strow is best,
being that which reconciles etymology with pronunciation. See STROW.]

1. To spread by being scattered.

The snow which does the top of Pindus strew,
Did never whiter shew. Spenser.

Is thine alone the seed that strews the plain?
The birds of heav'n shall vindicate their grain.

One hung a pole-ax at his saddle-bow,
And one a heavy mace to stun the foe. Dryden.
To STUN. The pret. and part. pass. of sting.
To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Shakespeare.

With envy stung, they view each other's deeds;
The fragrant work with diligence proceeds. Dryd.
To STUN. The pret. of stunk.
To STUNT. v. a. [stunta, Hollandic.] To hinder from growth.

Though this usage stunted the girl in her growth, it gave her a hardy constitution, she had life and spirit. Arbuthnot.
There he stopt short, nor since has writ a title,
But has the wit to make the most of little;
Like stunted lute-bound trees, that just have got Sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Pope.

The tree
Grew scrubby, dried a-top, and stunted;
And the next parson stubb'd and burnt it. Swift.
To STUPE. n. f. [stupa, Latin.] Cloth or flax dipped in warm medicaments, and

All the stupendous acts deservedly are the subject of a history excellently written in Latin by a learned prelate. Clarendon.

Great joy was at their meeting, and at sight
Of that stupendous bridge his joy increas'd, Wifem.
Portents and prodigies their souls amaz'd,
But most when this stupendous pile was rais'd. Dryden.

Mortals, fly this curst detested race;
A hundred of the same stupendous size,
A hundred Cyclops, live among the hills. Addis.
Our numbers can scarce give us an idea of the vast quantity of systems in this stupendous piece of architecture. Cham.

To STUPID. adj. [stupidus, French; stupidus,
Latin.]
1. Dull; wanting sensibility; wanting apprehension; heavy; sluggish of understanding.

O that men should be so stupid grown
As to forsake the living God. Milne.
Men, boys, and women, stupid with surprise,
Where'er the passes fix their wond'ring eyes. Dryd.
If I by chance succeed,
Know, I am not stupid, or so hard,
Not to feel praise, or fame's deserv'd reward. Dryd.

With wild surprise
A moment stupid, motionless, he stood. Thomson.
2. Performed without skill or genius.
Wit, as the chief of virtue's friends,
Disclaims to serve ignoble ends;
Observe what loads of stupid rhymes
Oppress us in corrupted times. Swift.

To STUPIDITY. n. f. [stupiditas, French;
stupiditas, Latin.] Dullness; heaviness of mind; sluggishness of understanding.

Shadwell alone, of all my sons, is he Who stands confirm'd in full stupidity. Dryden.

standing.
That spiced the evil one abstracted stood
From his own evil, and for the time remain'd stupidly good. Milton.

2. Dully; without apprehension.
On the shield there were engraven maps of countries, which Ajax could not comprehend, but looked on as stupidly as his fellow-beast the lion. Dryden.

To STUPIFY. v. a. [stupefacio, Latin:
this word should therefore be spelled stupefy; but the authorities are against it.]
1. To make stupid; to deprive of sensibility; to dull.

Those
Will stupefy and dull the sense a while. Shakespeare.
Consider whether that method, used to quiet loose consciences, does not stupefy more. Dorsey.
The fumes of his passion do so really intoxicate his discerning faculty, as the fumes of drink do.

The great officer of a powerful empire, given substance or a little poison, and varied types of viciousness.

SUBA'CT. v. a. [subactus, Latin.] To reduce; to subdue.

Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the comfort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body.

SUBA'CTION. n. f. [subactus, Lat.] The act of reducing to any state, as of mixing two bodies completely, or beating any thing to a very small powder.

There are of concubina two periods: the one affiliation, or absolute conversion and subaction;
the other maturation: whereof the former is most conspicuous in living creatures, in which there is an absolute conversion and affiliation of the nourishment into the body.

SUBA'LTERN. adj. [subalterne, French.]
Inferiour; subordinate; that in different respects is both superiour and inferiour.
It is used in the army of all officers below a captain.

Love's subalterns, a duteous band,
Like watchmen round their chief appear;
Each had his lantern in his hand,
And Venus, mask'd, brought up the rear.

There had like to have been a duel between two subalterns, upon a dispute which should be governour of Portsmouth.

One, while a subaltern officer, was every day complaining against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, after he received his commission for a regiment, he confessed the spirit of colonel-ship was coming fast upon him, and it daily increased to his death.

This sort of universal ideas, which may either be considered as a genus or species, is called subaltern.

SUBALTERNATE. adj. [subalternus, Lat.]
Succeeding by turns.

armpit or shoulder, whether artery, nerve, vein, or muscle.

The liver, though seated on the right side, yet, by the subclavian division, doth equidistantly communicate its activity unto either arm.

The chyle first mixeth with the blood in the sub-clavian vein, and enters with it into the heart, where it is very imperfectly mixed, there being no mechanism nor fermentation to convert it into blood, which is effected by the lungs.

SURCONSTELLATION. n. f. [sub and constellation.] A subordinate or secondary constellation.

As to the picture of the seven stars, if thereby be meant the Pleiades, or subconstellation upon the back of Taurus, with what congruity they are described, in a clear night an ordinary eye may discover.

SURCONTRARY. adj. [sub and contrary.]
Contrary in an inferiour degree.

If two particular propositions differ in quality,
they are subcontraries; as, some vine is a tree;
some vine is not a tree. These may be both true together, but they can never be both false.

SURCONTRACTED. part. adj. [sub and contracted.] Contracted after a former contract.

Your claim,
I bar it in the interest of my wife;
'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,
And I her husband contradict your banes.

weaves it into cloth, another into muslin; and these variously subdivided according to the fancy of the artificer.

TO SUBDIVID'ER. v. a. [subdiviser, French, sub and divide.] To divide a part into yet more parts.

In the rise of eight, in tones, there be two bee-moles, or half notes; so as if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes; and if you subdivide that into half notes, as in the stops of a lute, it maketh the number thirteen.

When Brutus and Cassius were overthrown, soon after Antonius and Octavianus broke and subdivided.

The glad father glories in his child,
When he can subdivide a fraction.

When the progenies of Cham and Japhet swarmed into colonies, and those colonies were subdivided into many others, in time their descendants lost the primitive rites of divine worship, retaining only the notion of one deity.

SUBDIVI'SION. n. f. [subdivision, French; from subdivide.]

1. The act of subdividing.

When any of the parts of any idea are farther divided, in order to a clear explication of the whole, this is called a subdivision, as when a year is divided into months, each month into days, and each day into hours, which may be farther subdivided into minutes and seconds.

2. The parts distinguished by a second division.

How can we see such a multitude of souls cast under to many subdivisions of misery, without reflecting on the absurdity of a government that sacrifices the happiness of so many reasonable beings to the glory of one?

In the decimal table the subdivisions of the cubit, as span, palm, and digit, are deduced from the shorter cubit.

SUBDOLOUS. adj. [subdolosus, Latin.] Canning; subtle; sly.

TO SUBDUCE' v. a. [subduco, subducere, Latin.]

Or nature said in me, and left some part
Not proof enough such object to sustain;
Or from my side subducing, took perhaps
More than enough.

3. To subduct by arithmetical operation;
Take the other operation of arithmetic, subduction; if out of that supposed infinite numbers of antecedent generations we should subtract ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before, and yet still the quotient must be infinite.

SUBDU'CTION. n. f. [from subducere.]
1. The act of taking away.

Possibly the divine beneficence subducting that influence which it communicated from the time of their first creation, they were kept in a state of immortality till that moment of the subduction.

2. Arithmetical subtraction.

Suppose we take the other operation of arithmetick, subduction; if out of that infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subtract ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before that subduction, and yet still the quotient be infinite.

TO SUBDU'E. v. a. [from subdo, or subjugo, Latin.]

1. To crush; to oppress; to sink; to over-

It ought were worthy to subdue
The soul of man.

2. To conquer; to reduce under a new dominion.

Be fruitful and replenish the earth, and subdue it.

Augustus Cæsar subdued Egypt to the Roman empire.

To overcome in battle, and subdue
Nations, and bring home spoils.

The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdued the world.

3. To tame; to subact; to break.

Not is't unwholesome to subdue the land
By often exercise, and where before
You broke the earth, again to plow.

SUBDU'EMENT. n. f. [from subducere.] Conquest. Not used, nor worthy to be used.

I have seen thee,
As hot as Persius, spur thy Phrygian freed
Bravely despoiling tortois and subduing ants.

SUBDU'ER. n. f. [from subducere.] Conqueror;
tamer.

Great god of might, that reigneth in the mind,
And all the body to thy best doth frame;
Victor of gods, subduer of mankind,
That dost the lion and the tiger tame,
Who can express the glory of thy might?

Their curious eye
Discerns their great subduer's awful mien
And corresponding features fair.

Eyes are great subduers of acrimony, useful in hoarseness and coughs, and extremely enlivening.

SUBDU'PLE. } adj. [subduplex, French; from subduplex, Lat.]

Containing one part of two.

As one of these under pulleys doth abate half of that heaviness which the weight hath in itself, and cause the power to be in a subduplex proportion unto it, to two of them do abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, and three a suboctuple.

The motion, generated by the forces in the whole passage of the body or thing through that space, shall be in a subduplicate proportion of the forces.

SUBJA'CENT. adj. [subjacens, Lat.] Lying under.

The superficial parts of mountains are washed away by rains, and borne down upon the subjacent plains.

TO SUBJECT. v. a. [subjecere, Lat.]

1. To put under.

The angel
Led them direct, and down the cliff as fast
To the subjacent plain.

The subject of a sentence is the name of the person or thing of which something is affirmed or denied. Pope.

Think not, young warriors, your diminished same hall foil of lustre, by subjecting rage to the cool dictates of experienced age.
To enslave; to make obnoxious. Dryden.
I live on bread like you, feel want like you,
afe grief, need friends like you; subjected thus,
how can you say to me I am a king? Shakespeare.
I see thee, in that fatal hour, subjected to the victor's cruel power,
and hence a slave. Dryden.
The blind will always be led by those that see,
a fall into the ditch; and he is the most subjected,
be most enslaved, who is so in his understanding. Locke.

To expose; to make liable.
If the vessels yield, it subjects the person to all inconveniences of an erroneous circulation. Arbuthnot.

Eau was never subject to Jacob, but founded a distinct people and government, and was himself prince over them. Locke.

Christ, since his incarnation, has been subject to the Father; and will be so also in his human capacity, after he has delivered up his mediatorial kingdom.
Waterland.

Exposed; liable; obnoxious.
Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds;
And he the noble image of my youth is overpread with them. Shakespeare.

All human things are subject to decay.
And when fate summons monarchs must obey.
Dryden.

Being that on which any action operates,
whether intellectual or material.
I enter into the subject matter of my discourse.
Dryden.

SUBJECT. n. f. [sujet, French.]
1. One who lives under the dominion of another; opposed to gouverneur.
Every subject's duty is the king's,
But every subject's soul is his own. Shakespeare.

Never subject long'd to be a king.
As I do long and wish to be a subject. Shakespeare.
Those I call subjects which are governed by the ordinary laws and magistracies of the sovereign.
Davies.

We must understand and confess a king to be a sovereign, a subject to be a vassal; and therefore honour to be by nature most due from the natural subject to the natural king. Holliday.

The subject must obey his prince, because God commands it; human laws require it. Swift.
Were subjects so but only by their choice,
And not from birth did subject dominion take,
Our prince alone would have the publick voice.
Dryden.

Heroick kings, whose high perfections have made them await to their subjects, can struggle with and subdue the corruption of the times. Ducenaut.

That on which any operation, either mental or material, is performed.
Now spurs the latest traveller apace
To gain the temple inn, and near approaches
The subject of our watch. Shakespeare.

The subject for heroick song pleased me. Milton.
How he would have us fix our thoughts; not are they too dry a subject for our contemplation.
Decay of Piety.

I will not venture on to vice a subject with my severer style. More.
Make choice of a subject beautiful and noble, which, being capable of all the graces that colours and elegant design can give, shall form a perfect art an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate.
Dryden.

The subject of a proposition is that concerning which any thing is affirmed or denied. Watts.
My real design is, that of publishing your praises to the world; not upon the subject of your noble birth. Swift.

3. That in which any thing inheres or exists.
Anger is certainly a kind of baseness, as it appears well in the weakness of those subjects, in whom it reigns, children, women, old folks, sick folks. Bacon.

4. [In grammar.] The nominative case to a

After the conquest of the kingdom, and subjection of the rebels, enquiry was made who there were that, fighting against the king, had saved themselves by flight. Hale.

2. [subjection, French.] The state of being under government.
Because the subjection of the body to the will is by natural necessity, the subjection of the will unto God voluntary, we therefore stand in need of direction after what sort our wills and desires may be rightly conformed to his. Hooker.

How hard it is now for him to frame himself to subjection, that, having once set before his eyes the hope of a kingdom, hath found encouragement.
Spenser.

Both in subjection now to sensual appetite.
Milton.

SUBJECTIVE. adj. [from subject.] Relating not to the object, but the subject.
Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective: objective is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. Watts.

SUBINGRESSION. n. f. [sub and ingressus, vessel.

The particles of mercury, uniting with the acid particles of spirit of salt, compose mercury sublimate;
and, with the particles of sulphur, cinabar. Newton.

SUBLIMATION. n. f. [sublimation, Fr.
from sublimate.]
1. A chymical operation which raises bodies in the vessel by the force of fire.
Sublimation differs very little from distillation, excepting that in distillation only the fluid parts of bodies are raised, but in this the solid and dry; and that the matter to be distilled may be either solid or fluid, but sublimation is only concerned about solid substances. There is also another difference, namely, that rarefaction, which is of very great use in distillation, has hardly any room in sublimation; for the substances which are to be sublimed, being solid, are incapable of rarefaction; and so it is only impulse that can raise them. Quincy.

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the settlement of liquors, by heat, by precipitation, or sublimation; that is, a calling of the several parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon.

Since oil of sulphur per campanum is of the same nature with oil of vitriol, may it not be inferred that sulphur is a mixture of volatile and fixed parts, so strongly cohering by attraction, as to descend together by sublimation? Newton.

2. Exaltation; elevation; act of heightening or improving.
She turns
Bodas to spirits, by sublimation orange. Davies.

Shall be procured to religious contemplation, who is defective and short in mind, which are but the rudiments and first draught of religion, a religion in the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of mankind South.

SUBSIDY. n. f. [subsideo, Fr. subsidium, Lat.] Aid, commonly such as is given in money.

They advised the king to send speedy aids, and with much alacrity granted a great rate of subsidy. Bacon.

'Tis all the subsidy the present age can raise. Dryden.

It is a celebrated notion of a patriot, that a house of commons should never grant such subsidies as give no pain to the people, lest the nation should acquiesce under a burden they did not feel. Addison.

TO SUBSIGN. v. a. [subsigno, Lat.] To sign under.

Neither have they seen any deed, before the conquest, but subsigned with crosses and single names without signatures. Camden.

TO SUBSIST. v. n. [subsisto, Fr. subsisto, Latin.]

1. To be; to have existence.
2. To continue; to retain the present state or condition.

Firm we subsist, but possible to swerve. Milton.
The very foundation was removed, and it was a moral impossibility that the republic could subsist any longer. Suiff.

3. To have means of living; to be maintained.

He shone so powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate; and gave me wherewithal to subsist in the long winter which succeeded. Dryden.

Let us remember those that want necessities, as we ourselves should have desired to be remembered, had it been our sad lot to subsist on other men's charity. Atterbury.

4. To inhere; to have existence by means of something else.

Though the general natures of these qualities are sufficiently distant from one another, yet when they come to subsist in particulars, and to be clothed with several accidents, then the difference is not so easy. South.

SUBSISTENCE or SUBSISTENCY. n. f. [subsistence, Fr. from subsisto.]

1. Real being.

The flesh, and the conjunction of the flesh with God, began both at one instant; his making and taking to himself our flesh was but one act; so that in Christ there is no personal subsistence but one, and that from everlasting. Hooker.

We know as little how the union is dissolved, as how it is first commenced. Glauclie.
Not only the things had subsistence, but the very images were of some creatures existing. Stillingfleet.

2. Competence; means of supporting life. His viceroy could only propose to himself a comfortable subsistence out of the plume of his province. Addison.

3. Inherence in something else. SUBSISTENT. adj. [subsistens, Lat.]

1. Having real being. Such as deny spirits subsistent without bodies will with difficulty affirm the separate existence of their own. Brown.

2. Inherent. These qualities are not subsistent in those bodies but are operations of fancy begotten in function else. Beattie.

SUBSTANCE. n. f. [substantia, Fr. substantia, Latin.]

1. Being; something existing; something of which we can say that it is.

Since then the soul works by herself alone, Springs not from sense, nor humours well agree Her nature is peculiar, and her own; She is a substance, and a perfect being. Denham.

The strength of gods, And this empyreal substance, cannot fail. Milne.

2. That which supports accidents. What creatures there inhabit, of what mold And substance? Milne.

Every being is considered as subsisting in itself, and then it is called a substance, or it is said to sit in and by another, and then it is called a mode or manner of being. Wallis.

3. The essential part. It will serve our turn to comprehend the substance without confining ourselves to scrupulous exactness in form. Digby.

This edition is the same in substance with the Latin. Barrow.

They are the best epitomes, and let you sit with one cast of the eye the substance of a hundred pages. Addison.

4. Something real, not imaginary; something solid, not empty.

If this atheist would have his chance to be a real and substantial agent, he is more stupid than the vulgar. Beattie.

2. True; solid; real; not merely seeming.
O blessed, blessed night! I am afraid,
Being in sight, all this is but a dream;
Too flattering sweet to be substantial. Shakespeare.
To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart, Substantial life. Milton.

It happens to be a substantial good,
Not fram'd of accidents, nor subject to them,
I err'd to seek it in a blind revenge.
Time, as a river, hath brought down to us what is more light and superficial, while things more solid and substantial have been immerged. Glenville.

The difference betwixt the empty vanity of ostentation, and the substantial ornaments of virtue. L'Estrange.

Observations are the only safe grounds whereon to build a lasting and substantial philosophy. Woodw.
A solid and substantial greatness of soul, looks down with neglect on the censures and applauses of the multitude. Addison.

The useful, charitable, humble employment of yourself, is what I recommend to you with greatest earnestness, as being a substantial part of a wife and pious life. Law.

To assert that God looked upon Adam's fall as a sin, and punished it as such, when, without any antecedent sin, he withdrew that actual grace, upon which it was impossible for him not to fall, highly reproaches the essential equity of the Divine Nature. South.
No promise can oblige a prince so much, still to be good, as long to have been such. Dryden.

4. A manner of expressing a particular person or thing.

I saw him yesterday
With such and such. Shakespeare
If you repay me not on such a day,
In such a place, such funs or fums as are Express'd in the condition, let the forfeit
Be an equal pound of your flesh. Shakespeare.
I have appointed my servants to such and such place. 1 Samuel.

Scarcely this word death from sorrow did proceed,
When in ruth'd one, and tells him such a knight
Is now arriv'd. Daniel.
Humbly overtook a party of the army, consisting of three thousand horse and foot, with a train of artillery, which he left at such a place, within three hundred paces of Berwick. Clarendon.

That which doth constitute any thing in its being, and distinguish it from all other things, is called the form or essence of such a thing. Hobbes.
The same sovereign authority may enact a law, commanding such or such an action to-day, and a quite contrary law forbidding the same to-morrow. South.

Those artists who propose only the imitation of such or such a particular person, without election of those ideas before-mentioned, have been reproached for that omission. Dryden.

TO SUCK. v. a. [sucan, Sax. fugos, fuc- tum, Lat. succer, Fr.]

1. To draw by making a rarefaction of the air.

2. To draw in with the mouth.
"The cup of astonishment thou shalt drink, and suck it out." Ezekiel.

We'll bind in hand to the dark manions go,
Where, sucking in each other's latest breath,
We may transfuse our souls. Dryden.

Still she drew
The sweets from ev'ry flower, and suck'd the dew. Dryden.

Transfix'd as o'er Castalia's streams he hung,
He suck'd new poisons with his triple tongue. Pope.

3. To draw the teat of a female.
Peltre, the more he suck'd, more taught the breast,
Like dropful folk full drink to be a thirst. Sidney.

A bitch will nurse young foxes in place of her puppies, if you can get them once to suck her so long, that her milk may go through them. Luttrell.

Did a child suck every day a new nurse, it would be no more affrighted with the charge or faces at six months old than at sixty. Locke.

4. To draw with the milk.
Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'dst it from me. Shakespeare.

Put on thy pride thyself.
To empty by sucking.

A vortex with whole swarms of flies jacking and sucking him. 17th Century.
Bears on tops of hills feed,
And creep within their bells to suck the balmy feed. Dryden.

5. To draw or drain.
I can suck melan choly out of a fong, as a weasel sucks eggs. Shakespeare.

Pumping bath tir'd our men;
Scas into feast thro' us, we suck in again. Dome.

A cubical vessel of brass is filled an inch and a half an hour; but because it sucks up nothing of the earth doth, take an inch for half an hour's rate. Barnet.

All the under passions,
As waters are by whirlpools suck'd and drawn,
Here quite devour'd in the vast gulph of empire. Dryden.

Old Ocean, suck'd through the porous globe,
Had long ere now forsook his horrid bed. Thomson.

VOL. II.

TO SUCK. v. n.

1. To draw by rarefying the air.
Continual repairs, the least defects in sucking
pumps are constantly requiring. Mortimer.

2. To draw the breast.
Such as are nourish'd with milk find the pains and suck at them, whereas none of those that are not designed for that nourishment ever offer to suck. Royce.

I would
Pluck the young sucking cuts from the she bear,
To win thee, lady. Shakespeare.

A nursing father bears with the sucking child
As with a lion. Shakespeare.

3. To draw; to imbibe.
The crown had suck'd too hard, and now, being full, was like to draw let's. Boyle.

SUCK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of sucking.

I hoped, from the defect of the quicksilver in the tube, upon the first suck, that I should be able to give a nearer guess at the proportion of force betwixt the pressure of the air and the gravity of the quicksilver. Boyle.

2. Milk given by females.
They draw with their suck the disposition of nurses. Spenser.

I have given suck, and know
How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me. Shakespeare.

Those first unpolish'd matrons
Gave suck to infants of gigantic mold. Dryden.
It would be inconvenient for buds to give suck. Royce.

SUCKER. n. f. [succer, Fr. from suck.]

1. Any thing that draws.
2. The embolus of a pump.

Oil must be pour'd into the cylinder, that the sucker may slip up and down in it more smoothly. Boyle.

The ascent of waters is by suckers or forcers, or something equivalent therunto. Hallam.

3. A round piece of leather, laid wet on a stone, and drawn up in the middle, rare-fies the air within, which pressing upon its edges, holds it down to the stone.

One of the round leathers wherewith boys play, called suckers, not above an inch and half diameter, being well soaked in water, will suck and pluck a stone of twelve pounds up from the ground. Crow.

4. A pipe through which any thing is sucked.

Mariners eye ply the pump.
So they, but the cruel, unattract'd, full move
The drawing sucker. Philips.

5. A young twig shooting from the stock.
This word was perhaps originally juncch,
[succulus, Lat.]

The cutting away of suckers at the root and body doth make trees grow high. Bacon.

Out of this old root a sucker may spring, that with a little shelter and good seasons may prove a mighty tree. Boyle.

SUCKER. n. f. [from suck.] A worm-meat, to be drawn in the mouth.

Nature's own sucker, the bee,
Whole suckers are most delicious;
The fish of his viscious mouth
Minting the garden into gold. Cromwell.

SUCKING-BOTTLE. n. f. [suck and bottle.]
A bottle which to children supplies the want of a pap.

He that will try, children join these general abstract speculations with the sucking-bottle, has more real for his opinion, but less sincerity. Locke.

TO SUCKLE. v. a. [from suck.] To nurse at the breast.

The breast of Heriba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier. Shakespeare.

She nurses me up and suckles me. 17th Century.
Two thriving calves she suckles twice a day. Dryden.

The Roman soldiers bare on their helmets the first history of Romulus, who was begot by the god of war, and suckled by a wolf. Addison.

SUCKLING. n. f. [from suck.] A young creature yet fed by the pap.

I provide a suckling.
That ne'er had nourishment but from the teat. Dryden.

Young animals participate of the nature of their tender aliment, as sucklings of milk. Arbutnot.

SUCKION. n. f. [from suck; fuction, Fr.]
The act of sucking.

Sounds (extensive and intense) may be made by suckion, as by emission of the breath. Bacon.

Though the valve were not above an inch and a half in diameter, yet the weight kept up by suckion, or supported by the air, and what was cut out of it, weighed ten pounds. Boyle.

Cornelius regulated the suckion of his child.
Arbutnot.

SUDATION. n. f. [sudo, Lat.] Sweat.

SUDATORY. n. f. [sudo, Lat.] Hothouse, sweating-bath.

SUDDEN. adj. [soudan, Fr. roben, Saxon.]

1. Happening without previous notice; coming without the common preparatives; coming unexpectedly.

We have not yet let down this day of triumph,
To-morrow, in my judgment, is too sudden. Shakespeare.

There was never any thing so sudden, but Caesar's thundering brag of I came, saw, and overcame. Shakespeare.

Herbs sudden flower'd,
Opening their various colours. Milton.

His death may be sudden to him, though it comes by never to flow degrees. Duty of Man.

2. Hasty; violent; rash; passionate; precipitate. Not in use.

I grant him
Sudden, malicious, mauling of ev'ry sin. Shakespeare.

SUDDEN. n. f.

1. Any unexpected occurrence; surprise.
Not in use.

Parents should mark the witty evens of their children at suddens and surprisals, rather than pamper them. Watson.

2. On or of a Sudden. Sooner than was expected; without the natural or commonly accustomed preparatives.

Following the flies at the very heels,
With them he cutters, who upon the sudden Cruel to their gates. Shakespeare.

How art thou lost, how on a sudden lost!
Milton.

They keep their patients so warm as almost to melt them, and all on a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue.

When you have a mind to leave your master, grow rude and fanny of a sudden, and beyond your usual behaviour. Suett.

SUDDENLY. adv. [from sudden.]

1. In an unexpected manner; without preparation; hastily.

You shall find traces of your Ancestors
Are richly come to harbour suddenly. Shakespeare.

Children of the sun mark the sound, the touch of the bell striking could not so strongly to suddenly that motion. Bacon.

To the pole they suddenly draw near,
And tumbling them to unexpected flight. Dryden.

She struck the warlike spear into the ground,
Which by cutting leaves did suddenly enclose,
And peaceful sheaves fill'd as the yoke. Dryden.

2. Without premeditation.
If thou canst excuse,
Do it without invention suddenly. Shakespeare.

SUDDENNESS. n. f. [from sudden.] State of being sudden; unexpected presence;
manner of coming or happening unexpectedly.

SUE

At in the open hall amazed stood,
At suddenness of that unwary sight,
And wond'ring at his breathless hasty mood.

He speedily run forward, counting his suddenness his most advantage, that he might overtake the English.

The rage of people is like that of the sea, which once breaking bounds, overflows a country with that suddenness and violence as leaves no hope of flying.

SUDORIFICK. [sudorifique, Fr. sudor and facio, Lat.] Provoking or causing sweat.

Physicians may well provoke sweat in bed by bottles, with a decoction of sudorifick herbs in hot water.

Exhaling the most liquid parts of the blood by sudorifick or watery expositions, brings it into a morbid state.

SUDORIFICK. n. f. A medicine provoking sweat.

As to sudorificks, consider that the liquid which goes off by sweat is often the most subtle part of the blood.

SUDOROUS. adj. [from sudor, Lat.] Consisting of sweat. Not used.

Beside the fragments and sudorous adhesions from men's hands, nothing proceedeth from gold in the usual decoction thereof.

SUDS. n. f. [from roeden, to seeth; whence robben, Sax.]

1. A lixivium of soap and water.
2. To be in the suds. A familiar phrase for being in any difficulty.

To SUE. v. a. [suer, Fr.]

1. To prosecute by law.
If any sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also.
2. To gain by legal procedure.
3. [In falconry.] To clean the beak, as a hawk.

To SUE. v. n. To beg; to entreat; to petition.

Full little knowest thou that hast not try'd,
What hell it is in suing long to bide.

If me thou deign to love and sue,
At thy command, to all these mountains be.

When madens sue,
Men give like gods.

We were not born to sue, but to command.

Ambassadors came unto him as far as the mouth of the Euphrates, suing unto him for peace.

For this, this only favour let me sue,
Refuse it not: but let my body have
The last retreat of human kind, a grave.

Despise not them, that in our hands bear we These holy boughs, and sue with words of pray'r.

'Twill never be too late,
To sue for chains, and own a conqueror.

The fair Egyptian
Courtied with freedom now the beauteous slave,
Now falling sued, and thren'ning now did rave.

By adverse destiny constrain'd to sue
For counsel and redress, he sues to you.

To SUE. v. a. To obtain by entreaty; with out. The expression is perhaps improper.

Nor was our blessed Saviour only our propitiation to die for us, but he is still our advocate, continually interceding with his Father in the behalf of all true penitents, and suing out a pardon for them in the court of heaven.

SUET. n. f. [suet, an old French word, according to Skinner.] A hard fat, particularly that about the kidneys.

The stomach being suet, yields not to escaroticks.

The stomach being suet, yields not to escaroticks.

The stomach being suet, yields not to escaroticks.

The stomach being suet, yields not to escaroticks.

SUF

SU'ETY. adj. [from suet.] Consisting of suet; resembling suet.

If the matter forming a wen resembles fat or a suet substance, it is called suety.

To SUFFER. v. a. [suffero, Lat. souffrir, French.]

1. To bear; to undergo; to feel with sense of pain.

A man of great wrath shall suffer punishment.

A woman suffered many things of physicians, and spent all the had.

Thus trampled, thus expell'd to suffer here,
Cling and these torments? Better these than worse.

By my advice, since late inevitable
Schidiasus, and omnipotent deities,
The victor's will To suffer as to do,
Our strength is equal, not the law unjust
That to do us

Obedience impos'd,
On penalty of death, and suffering death.

2. To endure; to support; not to sink under.

Our spirit and strength entire Strain'd to suffer and support our pains.

3. To allow; to permit; not to hinder.

He wonder'd that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home.

Oh have I seen a boat o'erweening our Run back and bite, because he was withheld:
Who being suffered, with the bear's fell paw
Hath clapt his tail betwix his legs and cry'd.

My duty cannot suffer
To obey in all your daughter's hard commands!

Rebuke thy neighbour, and not suffer sin upon him.

I suffer them to enter and possess.

He that will suffer himself to be informed by observation, will find few signs of a soul accustomed to much thinking in a new-born child.

4. To pass through; to be affected by; to be acted upon.

The air now must suffer change.

To SUFFER. v. n.

1. To undergo pain or inconvenience.

My breast I arm, to overcome by suffering.

Prudence and good-breeding are in all stations necessary; and most young men suffer in the want of them.

2. To undergo punishment.

The father was first condemn'd to suffer upon a day appointed, and the son afterwards the day following.

He thus
Was forc'd to suffer for himself and us!

Hear to his father's sorrows with his crown.

3. To be injured.

Publick buhnets sufferers by private infirmities, and kingdoms fall into weakness by the diseases or decays of those that manage them.

SUFFERABLE. adj. [from suffer.] Tolerable; such as may be endured.

Now no more sufferable
It is sufferable in any to use what liberty they list in their own writing, but the contracting and extending the lines and sense of others would appear a thankless office.

SUFFERABLY. adv. [from sufferable.] Tolerably; so as to be endured.

An infant Titan held she in her arms;
Yet sufferably bright, the eye might bear
The ungrown glories of his beamy hair.

To SUFFER. n. f. [from suffer; souffrance, Fr.]

1. Pain; inconvenience; misery.

He must not only die,
But thy unkindness shall the death draw out
To lingering suffering.

How much education may reconcile young people to pain and suffering, the examples of Sparta shew.

2. Patience; moderation.

He thought t' have slain her in his fierce despatch;
But hasty heat tempering with suffering woe,
He said his hand.

He hath given excellent suffering and vigour to the fullerers, arming them with courage

Not was his suffering of other kindnesses as a pity than that he evidenced in the reception of calumny.

And should I touch it nearly, bear it
With all the suffering of a tender friend.

3. Toleration; permission; not hindrance.

In process of time, sometimes by suffering, and sometimes by special leave and favour, they come to themselves outcries not in any sumptuous or itately manner.

Most wretched man,
That to affections does the bridle lend;
In their beginning they are weak and wan,
But soon through suffering grow to fearful end.

Some villains of my court
Are in content and suffering in this

Both gloried to have 'scap'd the dycean threat
As gods, and by their own recover'd strength,
Not by the suffering of supernal power.

SUFFERER. n. f. [from suffer.]

1. One who endures or undergoes pain or inconvenience.

This evil on the Philistines is fall'n,
The sufferers then will scarce molest us here
From other hands we need not much to fear

He, when his love was bounded in a few,
That were unhappy that they might be true,
Made you the favorite of his last sad times,
That is, a sufferer in his subjects crimes.

She returns to me with joy in her face, not the sight of her husband, but from the good luck she has had at cards; and if she has been a loser, I am doubly a sufferer by it: she comes home out of humour, because she has been throwing away my estate.

The history of civil wars and rebellions does not make such deep and lasting impressions, as events of the same nature in which we or our friends have been sufferers.

Often these unhappy sufferers expire for want of sufficient vigour and spirit to carry on the usual regimen.

2. One who allows; one who permits.

SUFFERING. n. f. [from suffer.] Pain suffered.

Rejoice in my sufferings for you.

With what strength, what steadiness of mind,
He triumphs in the midst of all his sufferings!

We may hope the sufferings of innocent people, who have lived in that place which was the seat of rebellion, will secure from the like attempts

It increased the smart of his present sufferings to compare them with his former happiness.

Then it is that the reasonableness of God's providence, in relation to the sufferings of good men in this world, will be fully justified.

To SUFFICE. v. n. [suffire, Fr. suffice, Lat.] To be enough; to be sufficient, to be equal to the end or purpose.

If thou ask me why, suffice it, my genius is good.

To recount almighty works,
What words or tongue of seraph can suffice
Or heart of mag' to comprehend
The indolency we have, suffering for our present happiness, we desire not to venture the change; being content; and that is enough.

He lived in such temperance, as was enough to make the longest life agreeable, and in such a course of piety, as, justified to make the most den death so alio.

SUFFICE. v. a.

To afford; to supply.

Hearts of all men, there would need be no other restraint from evil.

Seem I to thee sufficiently possess'd
Of happiness?

All to whom they are propos'd, are by his grace sufficiently moved to attend and consent to them, yet not so much as to embrace them, for it were needful by more, all would embrace them, and it was were sufficiently moved, none would embrace them.

In a few days, or hours, if I am to leave this carcase to be buried in the earth, and to find myself either for ever happy in the favour of God, or eternally separated from all light and peace; in any words sufficiently express the bitterness of every thing else?

On her smooth shoulders, and to suits her face. Dryden.

If different suits should give us a list of those innate practical principles, they would let down only such as *suit*ed their distinct hypocrisies. Locke.

3. To dress; to clothe.

Raise her notes to that sublime degree,
Which suits a song of piety and cheer. Pope.

Such a Sebastian was my brother too,
So went he *suit*ed to his watery tomb: Pope.

If spirits can assume both form and suit,
You come to fright us. Shakespeare.

Be better suited;

These weeds are memories o' those misfortunes;
I prythee put them off to woful hours. Shaksp.

I'll disrobe me

of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
As does a British peasant. Shakespeare.

To SUIT, v. n. To agree; to accord.

By one intefte, the other still remains,

Can it well suit with either; but soon prove

It suits alike. Milton.

The place itself was suiting to his care,

Age and visage as the cruel hour. Dryden.

Try does with a noble nature suit

Constraint does ill with love and beauty suit. Dryden.

according with; agreeable to: with to.

Through all those miseries, in both there appeared a kind of nobleness not suitable to that altention. Sidney.

What he did purpose, it was the pleasure of God that Solomon his son should perform, in manner suitable to their present and ancient state. Hooker.

To solemn acts of royalty and justice, their suitable ornaments are a beauty; are they only in religion a fash? Hooker.

It is very suitable to the principles of the Roman church; for why should not their science as well exterior be in an unknown tongue? Tillotson.

As the blessings of God upon his honest industry had been great, so he was not without intentions of making suitable returns in acts of charity. Atterb.

Expression is the diet of thought, and still

Appears more decent, as more suitable;

A die conceit in pompous words express'd,

Is like a clown in regal purple dress'd. Pope.

It is as great an absurdity to suppose holy prayers and divine petitions without an holiness of life suitable to them, as to suppose an holy and devout life without prayers. Izaak.

SUITABLENESS, n. f. [from suitable.]

Fitness; agreeableness.

In words and styles, suitableness makes them accepted and effective. Glanville.

With ordinary minds, it is the suitableness, not the excellence of a truth that makes it to be yielded to, and it is seldom that any thing practically convinces a man that does not please him first. South.

He creates these sympathies and suitableness of nature that are the foundation of all true friendship, and by his providence brings persons to affect together. South.

Consider the laws themselves, and their suitable-ness or unsuitableness to those to whom they are given. Tillotson.

SUITABLY, adv. [from suitable.] Agreeably; according to.

any text suitably thereto; and ought to speak suitably to that text. South.

Some rank deity, whose filthy face

We suitably o'er thinking fables place. Dryden.

SUITOR, n. f. [from suit.]

1. One that sues; a petitioner; a suppli-cant.

As humility is in suitors a decent virtue, so the refutation thereof, by such effectual acknowledgments, not only argueth a found apprehension of his supereminent glory and majesty before whom he stand, but putteth also into his hands a kind of pledge or bond for security against our unthankfulness. Hooker.

She hath been a suitor to me for her brother,

Cut off by course of justice. Shakespeare.

My piteous soul began the wretchedness

Of suitors at court to mourn. Donne.

Not only bind thine own hands, but bind the hand of suitors also from offering. Bacon.

Yet their port

Not of mean suitors; nor important left

Secund their petition, than when the ancient pair,

Democleion and chaste Pyrrha, to reforme

The race of mankind drown'd, before the flame

Of Themis flood devout. Milton.

I challenge nothing;

But I'm an humble suitor for these prisoners. Daniel.

My lord, I come an humble suitor to you. Rowe.

2. A wooer; one who courts a mistress.

I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart; for truly I love none.

—A dear happiness to women! they would else

have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. Shaksp.

He pass'd a year under the countess of his mother, and then became a suitor to Sir Roger Alston's daughter. Wotton.

By many suitors sought, she moles then pains,

And still her vow'd virginity maintains. Dryden.

He drew his tent, tumbling, to his side,

Far from the suitor train, about a crowd. Pope.

Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight? Shakespeare.

Night with her sullen wings to double shade,

The dark fowls in their clay nests were couch'd,

And now wild beasts came forth the woods to rove. Milton.

A glimpse of moon-shine, streak'd with red;

A dusky, sullen, and uncertain light,

That dances through the clouds, and shuts us in. Dryden.

No cheerful breeze this sullen region knows,

The dreaded east is all the wind that blows. Pope.

5. Heavy; dull; sorrowful.

Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,

And sullen prove not your own decay. Shakespeare.

SULLENLY, adv. [from sullen.] Gloomily;

malignantly; intractably.

To say they are moved without the assistance of some principle that has wisdom in it, and come to pass from chance, is sullenly to assert a thing because we will assert it. Moss.

He in chains demanded more

Than he impos'd in victory before.

He sullenly reply'd, he could not make

These offers now. Dryden.

The general mends his weary pace,

And sullenly to his revenge he fails;

So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,

And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryd.

SULLENNESS, n. f. [from sullen.] Gloomi-ness; moroseousness; sullenish anger; malignity; intractability.

Rolfe.

He's dead, whose love had sully'd all your reign,

And made you emperors of the world in vain. Dryden.

Lasting years shall weep their destin'd race,

Chag'd with all omens sully'd with disgrace. Prior.

Publick justice may be done to those virtuous then humanity took care to conceal, which were sully'd by the calumnies and slanders of malicious men. Nelson.

Let there be no spots to sully the brightness of this humanity. Atterbury.

Ye walkers too, that youthful colours wear,

Thence sully'd trade away with equal care,

The little chimney sweeper stalks along,

And marks with sooty stains the heedless throng. Car.

SULLY, n. f. [from the verb.] Soil; tarnish; spot.

You bring, the light sully on my son,

As 'twere a thing a little soil'd in th' working. Shakespeare.

When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames

Must render up myself. Shakespeare.

Dart and javelin, stones and sulphurous fire.

Arden.

Is not the strength and vigour of the action between light and sulphurous bodies, observed above,

one reason why sulphurous bodies take fire more readily, and burn more vehemently, than other bodies do? Newton.

The fury heard, while on Cocytus' bank

Her sulphurous waters drink. Pope.

To SUSPEND, v. a. [suspendre, Fr. sus- pendo, Latin.]

1. To hang; to make to hang by any thing.

As 'twixt two equal armies fate
Suspends uncertain victory;
Out souls, which, to advance our fate,
Were gone out, hung 'twixt her and me. Denham.

It is reported by Rufinus, that in the temple of Scrapis there was an iron char, or suspended by load-stones; which stones removed, the chariot fell and was dashed to pieces. Brown.

2. To make to depend upon.

God hath in the scripture suspended the promise of eternal life upon this condition, that, without obedience and holiness of life, no man shall ever see the Lord. Tillotson.

3. To interrupt; to make to stop for a time.

The harmony
Suspended hell, and took with raptiment
The thronging audience. Milton.

The guard nor lights nor fires; their fate to me,
At once suspends their courage and their fear. Deham.

The British dame, fam'd for restless grace,
Commands not now but for the second place;
Our love suspended, we neglect the fairy
For whom we burn'd, to gaze adoring here. Grenville.

4. To delay; to hinder from proceeding.

Suspend your indignation against my brother, till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent. Shakespeare.

His answer did the nymph attend;
Her looks, her sighs, her gestures all did pray him;
But Godfrey wisely did his grant suspend,
He doubts the worst, and that a while did stay him. Fairfax.

To themselves I left them;
For I suspended their doom. Milton.

The reasons for suspending the play were ill founded. Dryden.

This is the hinge on which turns the liberty of intellectual beings, in their steady prosecution of true felicity, that they suspend this prosecution in particular cases, till they have looked before them. Locke.

5. To keep undetermined.

A man may suspend his choice from being determined for or against the thing proposed, till he has examined whether it be really of a nature to make him happy or no. Locke.

6. To debar for a time from the execution of an office or enjoyment of a revenue.

Good men should not be suspended from the exercise of their ministry, and deprived of their livelihood, for ceremonies which are on all hands acknowledged indifferent. Saunders.

The bishop of London was summoned for not suspending Dr. Sharp. Swift.

SUSPENSE, n. f. [suspens, Fr. suspensus,
Latin.]

1. Uncertainty; delay of certainty or determination; indeterminateness.

Till this be done, their good affection towards the safety of the church is acceptable, but the way they prescribe us to preserve it by, must rest in suspense. Hooker.

Such true joy's suspense

What dream can I pretend to recompense? Waller.
Ten days the prophet in suspense remain'd,
Would no man's late pronouncement, at last contrain'd
By Itharus, be so vainly design'd. Denham.

Me for the sacrifice.

2. Act of withholding the judgment.

In propositions, where though the proofs in view are of most moment, yet there are sufficient grounds to suspect that there is fallacy, or proofs as confidable to be produced on the contrary side, there sus- pense or dissent are often voluntary. Locke.

Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspense, deliberation and tentativeness, whether its satisfaction involves train our true happiness. Locke.

3. Stop in the midst of two opposites.

For thee the fates, tenfold kind, ordain
A cool suspense from pleasure or from pain.

SUSPENSIVE, adj. [suspensus, Latin.]

1. Held from proceeding.

The great light of day yet wants to run
Much of his race, though deep suppense in heav'n Held by thy voice. Milton.

2. Held in doubt; held in expectation.

The self-same orders allowed, but yet established in more wary and suppense manner, as being to stand in force till God should give the opportunity of some general conference what might be left for every of them afterwards to do, had both prevented all occasion of just dislike which others might take, and referred a greater liberty unto the authors themselves, of entering unto further consultation afterwards. Hooker.

This said, he sat; and expectation held
His looks suppense, awaiting who appear'd
To second or oppose. Milton.

SUSPENSION. n. f. [suspension, Fr. from suspend.]

1. Act of making to hang on any thing.
2. Act of making to depend on any thing.
3. Act of delaying.

Had we had time to pray,
With thousand vows and tears we should have fought,
That sad decree's suspension to have wrought. Waller.

4. Act of withholding or balancing the judgment.

In his Indian relations, wherein are contained incredible accounts, he is usually to be read with suspension; there are they which weakened his authorities with former ages, for he is seldom mentioned without derogatory parentheticals. Brown.

The mode of the will, which answers to dubita-tion, may be called suspension; and that which in the fantastick will is obliquity, is constancy in the intellectual. Grew.

5. Interruption; temporary cessation.

Nor was any thing done for the better adjusting things in the time of that suspension, but every thing left in the same state of unconcernedness as before. Clarendon.

6. Temporary privation of an office; as, the clerk incurred suspension.

SUSPENSORY. adj. [suspensoire, Fr. suf-pensus, Lat.] That by which any thing hangs.

There are several parts peculiar to brutes which are wanting in man, as the seventh or suspensory muscles of the eye. Ruy.

SUSPICION. n. f. [suspicion, Fr. suspi-cio, Lat.] The act of suspecting; imagination of something ill without proof.

This suspicion Miso for the hoggish shrewdness of her brain, and Mopsa for a very unlikely envy, flamished upon. Sidney.

Suspicious amongst thoughts are like bats amongst birds; they ever fly by twilight; they are to be repelled, or at the least well guarded, for they cloud the mind. Lucan.

Suspicion all our lives shall be thick full of eyes;
For reason is but traitor'd like a fox.
Who, ne'er to tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors. Shakspeare.

Though wisdom wake, suspicion sleeps
At wisdom's gate; and to simplicity
Rebels her charge, while goodness thinks no ill
Where no ill seems. Milton.

SUSPICIOUS. adj. [suspiciosus, Latin.]
1. Inclined to suspect; inclined to imagine ill without proof.

Nature itself, after it has done an injury, will for ever be suspicious, and no man can love the person he suspects. South.

2. Indicating suspicion or fear.
A wise man will find us to be rogues by our faces:
we have a suspicious, fearful, constrained countenance, often turning and flinking through narrow lanes. Swift.

3. Liable to suspicion; giving reason to imagine ill.

They, because the light of his candle too much drowned theirs, were glad to lay hold on to colour-able matter, and exceeding forward to traduce him as an author of suspicious innovations. Hooker.

I spy a black suspicious threatening cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun. Shakspeare.
Authors are suspicious, nor greedily belowed, who pretend to deliver universal maxims, things, and the occult abstrusities of things. Milton.

His life
Private, unactive, calm, contemplative,
Little suspicious to any king.
Many mischievous inferences are daily at work, to make people of merit suspicious of each other. Pope.

SUSPICIOUSLY. adv. [from suspicious.]

1. With suspicion.
2. So as to raise suspicion.

His guard entering the place, found Plangus with his sword in his hand, but not naked, but standing suspiciously enough, to one already suspicious. Sidney.

SUSPICIOUSNESS. n. f. [from suspicious.]
Tendency to suspicion.

To make my estate known seemed impossible, by reason of the suspiciousness of Miso, and my young misdeeds. Sidney.

SUSPIRATION. n. f. [suspiratio, from suspiro, Lat.] Sigh; act of fetching the breath deep.

Not customary suits of solemn black,
Nor windy suspiration of forced breath,
That can denote me truly. Shakspeare.

In deep suspirations we take more large gulphs of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love or sorrow. More.

TO SUSPIRE. v. n. [suspiro, Lat.]

1. To sigh; to fetch the breath deep.
2. It seems in Shakspeare to mean only, to begin to breathe; perhaps mistaken for respire.

Since the birth of Cain, the first male child,
To him that did but yesterday suspire,
There was not such a gracious creature born. Shakspeare.

TO SUSTAIN. v. a. [soutenir, French;
sustineo, Latin.]

1. To bear; to prop; to hold up.
2. To support; to keep from sinking under evil.

The admirable cunnosity and singular excellency of this design will sustain the patience, and animate
the industry, of him who shall undertake it. Holder.

If he have no comfortable expectations of another life to sustain him under the evils in this world, he is of all creatures the most miserable. Tillotson.

3. To maintain; to keep.
- What food
Will he convey up thither to sustain Himself and army? Milton.

But at on her, not she on it depends;
For she the body doth sustain and cherish. Davis.

My labour will sustain me. Milton.

4. To help; to relieve; to assist.
- They charged, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to entreat for him, or any way sustain him. Shakspeare.

His sons, who seek the tyrant to sustain,
And long for arbitrary lords again,
He dooms to death, asserting publick right. Dryd.

5. To bear; to endure.
- Can Ceyx then sustain to leave his wife,
And unconscion'd forsake the sweets of life? Dryd.

Shall Turnus then such endless toil sustain
In fighting fields, and conquer towns in vain?
The mind stands collected within herself, and sustains the shock with all the force which is natural to her; but a heart in love has its foundations sapped. Addison.

6. To bear without yielding.
- Sa. hariffa's beauty's wine
Which to madness doth incline;
Such a liquor as no brain
That is mortal can sustain. Waller.

7. To suffer; to bear as inflicted.

If you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
but that you shall sustain more new disgraces,
With these you bear already. Shakspeare.

Were it I thought death menac'd would ensue
This my attempt, I would sustain alone
The worst and not persuade thee. Milton.

SUSTAINABLE. adj. [soutenable, French,
from sustain.] That may be sustained.

SUSTAINER. n. f. [from sustain.]
1. One that props; one that supports.
2. One that sustains; a supporter.

Thyself hast a sustainer been
Of much affliction in my eye. Chapman.

SUSTENANCE. n. f. [sustenance, Fr.]

1. Support; maintenance.
2. Necessaries of life; victuals.

Scarcely allowing himself fit sustenance of life, rather than he would spend those goods for whole take only he seemed to joy in life. Shakspeare.

There are to one end sundry means, as for the sustenance of our bodies many kinds of food, many sorts of raiment to clothe our nakedness. Holder.

Is then the honour of your daughter of greater moment to her, than to my daughter her's, while sustenance it was? Addison.

SUSTENTATION. n. f. [sustentation, Fr.
from sustento, Latin.]

1. Support; preservation from falling.
2. Use of victuals.

A very abstemious animal, by reason of its fleg-idity and latancy in the winter, will long subsist without a visible sustentation. Lrous.

3. Maintenance; support of life.

When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation; it is of necessity that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Locke.

SUSURRATION. n. f. [from susuro, Lat.]
Whisper; soft murmur.

SUTE. n. f. [for sute.] Sort. I believe only misprinted.

Christ, thus we conceive, that they are not of one jute. Haller.

SUTLER. n. f. [soetler, Dutch; sutler, German.] A man that sells provisions and liquor in a camp.

I shall sute be Unto the camp, and profits will accrue. Shakspeare.

Send to the sutler's, there you'll find to eat
The bulky match'd with ruffians of his kind. Dryd.

SUTURE. n. f. [sutura, Latin.]

1. A manner of sewing or stitching, particularly of stitching wounds.

Wounds, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by moleculaton: to maintain this contact, several sorts of sutures have been invented, the now chiefly described are the interrupted, the glovers, the quilled, the twisted and the double;
but the interrupted and twisted are almost the only victual ones. Sharr.

2. A particular articulation, the bones of the cranium are joined to one another by four sutures. Querc.

Many of our vessels degenerate into ligaments, and the sutures of the skull are abolished in old age. Ashburn.

 Lord Moll, Meg, and Marrian, and Margery.

Was any thing wanting to the extravagance of this degenerate age, but the making a swabber and a swabber, the hero of a tragedy? Dennis.

SWADDLE. v. a. [swedan, Saxon.]

To swaddle; to bind in clothes, generally used of binding new-born children.

Inveiled by a veil of clouds,
 And swaddled as new-born in fable shrouds;

For their a receptive I design'd. Sandys.

How soon doth man decay!

When cloths are taken from a chest of sweets,
 To swaddle infants, whole young breath

Scarce knows the way.

Those cloths are little wadding sheets,
 Which do consign and send them unto death.

Herbert.

They swaddled me up in my night-gown with long pieces of linen, till they had wrapt me in about a hundred yards of swathe. Ad. jon.

To beat; to cudgel. A low ludicrous

word.

Great on the bench, great in the saddle,
 That could as well bind o'er as swaddle Hudb.

SWADDLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Clothes bound round the body.

I begged them to unlace me: no, no, say they,
 and upon that carried me to one of their houses, and put me to bed in all my swaddles. Addison.

SWADDLING-BAND. n. f. [from swad- swaddling CLOTH. } dle. Cloth

SWADDLING-CLOTH. } wrapped round

a new-born child.

From thence a tury their unsweeting rest,
 There as thou slept'st in tender swaddling-band,

And her bale eith' broad there for thee left:

Such men do changelings call, so changed by fairies their. Spenser.

That great baby you see there is not yet out of his swaddling-cloths. Shakespeare.

The swaddling-bands were purple, wrought with gold. Dryden.

To SWAG. v. n. [swigan, Saxon; swiga, landick.] To sink down by its weight;

to hang heavy.

They are more apt, in swagging down, to pierce with the points, than in the jacent posture, and crease the wall. Hutton.

Being a tall fish, and with his sides much compressed, he hath a long fin upon his back, and another answering to it upon his belly; by which he is the better kept upright, or from swagging on his sides. Green.

To SWAGE. v. a. [from swage.] To ease;

to soften; to mitigate.

Apt words have pow'r to swage

The terrors of a troubled mind,

And ease as balm to tender wounds. Milton.

Our waiting pow'r to mitigate and swage,

With levan touches, troubled thoughts, and a chafe

Anguish, and doubt, and tear from mortal minds. Milton.

I will love thee.

Though my distracted senses should forsake me,

I'd find some intervals, when my poor heart

Should swage itself, and be let loose to thee. Ottway.

To SWAGGER. v. n. [swadder, Dut.

to make a noise; swegan, Saxon.] To bluster; to bully; to be turbulently and tumultuously proud and insolent.

Drunk? insolent? swagger? and discourse fustian with one's own shadow? Oh thou invincible spirit of man! Shakespeare.

In the cage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive; a rascal that swaggered with me last night. Shakespeare.

The lesser size of mortals love to swagger for passion, and to boast inaffability of knowledge.

Glennville.

Many such asses in the world ha'f, look big, stare,
 dret, cock, and swagger, at the same nooty rate.

L'Estrange.

He chuck'd,

And scarcely design'd to set a foot to ground,

But swagger'd like a word. Druden

Couldst see, how weakly forever founded, both some erect upon the ignorant, who think there is long time more than ordinary in a *swagger*ing man, that talks of nothing but deano diation. Timon

To be great, is not to be flattered, and to be superbious; to swagger at our tootmen, and brow-

beat our inferiours. Cato

What a pleasure is it to be victorious in a cause to swagger at the bar? for a lawyer I was born, and a lawyer I will be. Arctur

SWAGGER. n. f. [from swagger.] A blutner; a bully; a turbulent nooty follow.

He's no swaggerer, hoists; a tame cheater: you may stroke him as gently as a puppy greyhound.

bandry.

It were a happy life

To be no better than a homely swain. Shakespeare.

3. A pastoral youth.

Bless swains! whole nymphs in ev'ry grace excel:

Bless nymphs! whole swains those graces sing to well. Pope

Leave the meer country to meet country swains,

And dwell where life in all life's glory reigns.

Hart.

SWAINMOTE. n. f. [swainmote, law

Latin.] A court touching matters of the forest, kept by the charter of the forest thrice in the year. This court of swainmote is as incident to a forest, as the court of piepowder is to a fair.

The swainmote is a court of freeholders within the forest. Corall.

rundo.] A small bird of passage; or,

as some say, a bird that hes hid and sleeps in the winter.

The swallow follows not summer more willingly than we your lordship. Shakespeare.

Dallidils,

That come before the swallow darts. Shakespeare.

The swallows make use of celandine, and the linnet of cuphegus. Moss.

When swallows fleet four high and sport in air,

He told us that the welkin would be clear. Gray.

To SWALLOW. v. a. [swelgan, Saxon; swelgen, Dutch.]

1. To take down the throat.

If little faults

Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,

Whose capital crimes chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Shakespeare.

Appear before us!

Men are, at a venture, of the religion of the country; and must therefore swallow down opinions, as filly people do empericks pills, and have nothing to do but believe that they will do the cure. Locke.

2. To receive without examination.

Consider and judge of it as a matter of reason,
 and not swallow it without examination as a matter of faith. Locke.

3. To engross; to appropriate: often with up emphatical.

Far be it from me, that I should swallow up or despoil. Samuel.

Homer excels all the inventors of other arts in this, that he has swallowed up the honour of those who succeeded him. Pope.

4. To absorb; to take in; to sink in any abyss; to engulf; with up.

Thou'lt you enter the winds, and let them fight

Against the charaxes, though the yefly waves

Confound land swallow navigation up. Shakespeare.

I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb

Of this deep pit, poor swallowing grave. Shakespeare.

Death swallowed up in victory. Comenius.

If the earth open her mouth, and swallow them up, ye shall understand that these men have provoke'd the Lord. Numbers.

In bogs swallow'd up and lost. Milton.

He had many things from us, not that they would swallow up our understanding, but divert our attention from what is more important. Decay of Piety.

Nature would absorb

To be forced back again upon herself,

And like a whirlpool swallow her own streams.

Dryden.

Should not the swallow swallow up?

My other crew, and draw them all into it? Add.

Thomson.

SWAN. n. f. [swan, Saxon; swan, Danish;

swan, Dutch; cygnus, Latin.]

The swan is a huge water-fowl, that has a long neck, and is very white, excepting when it is young.

Its legs and feet are black, as is its bill, which is like that of a goose, but something rounder, and a little hooked at the lower end of it. The two fish below its eyes are black and shining like ebony.

Swans are wings like tails, which catch the wind, so that they are driven along in the water. They feed upon herbs and some sort of grain like a goose, and some are said to have lived three hundred years.

There is a species of swan with the feathers of their heads, toward the beak, marked at the ends with a gold colour inclining to red. The swan is reckoned by Moles among the most creatures; but it was consecrated to Apollo the god of music, because it was said to sing melodiously when it was near expiring; a tradition generally received, but incorrect. Cu met.

With untaunted eye
Compare her face with fairs that I shall show;
And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.

Shakespeare.

Let music sound, while he doth make his choice;
Then if he lose, he makes a swan-like end.

Shakespeare.

The fearful nations raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply,
A jarring sound retorts, and mingles in the sky,
Like that of swans returning to the floods.

Dryden.

The idea which an Englishman signifies by the name swan, is a white colour, long neck, black beak, black legs, and whole feet, and all these of a certain size, with a power of swimming in the water, and making a certain kind of noise.

Locke.

SWAN'SKIN. n. f. [swan and skin.] A kind of soft lannel, imitating for warmth the down of a swan.

SWAP. adv. [ad suppa, to do at a snatch, [Islandick.] Hastily; with hasty violence; as, he did it swap. It seems to be of the same original with swamp. A low word.

SWARD. n. f. [sward, Swedish.]

1. The skin of bacon.

2. The surface of the ground; whence green sward, or green sward.

Water kept too long broke us and softens the sward, makes it subject to ruttles and coarse grass.

Note on Tupper.

The noon of night was past, and then the toe Came dreading o'er the level sward, that lies Between the wood and the swift screaming Ouse.

A. Phillips.

To plant a vineyard in July, when the earth is very dry and combustible, plow up the sward, and burn it.

Mortimer.

SWARE. The preterit of swear.

SWARM. n. f. [swarm, Saxon; swarm, Dutch.]

1. A great body or number of bees, or other small animals, particularly those bees that migrate from the hive.

A swarm of bees that cut the liquid sky,
Upon the topmost branch in clouds alight. Dryden.

2. A multitude; a crowd.

From this swarm of fair advantages,
You grip'd the general way into your hand.

Shakespeare.

If we could number up those prodigious swarms that had settled themselves in every part of it, they would amount to more than can be found.

Addison.

This swarm of themes that settles on my pen,
Which I, like summer-flies, shake off again,
Let others sing.

Young.

To SWARM. v. n. [swarmman, Saxon; swermen, Dutch.]

1. To rise as bees in a body, and quit the hive.

All hands employ'd,
Like labouring bees on a long summer's day;
Some sound the trumpet for the rest to swarm.

Dryden.

Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spied. Gay.
When bees hang in swarming time, they will presently rise, if the weather hold. Mortimer.

2. To appear in multitudes; to crowd; to throng.

The merciless Macdonel,
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon.

Shakespeare.

Our superfluous lacqueys, and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle.

Shakespeare.

What a multitude of thoughts at once
Awaken'd in me swarm, while I consider
What swarm within I feel myself, and hear What swarm without comes often to my ears! Mit.

Then mounts the throne, high plac'd before the firm;

In crowds around the swarming people join.

Dryden

3. To be crowded; to be overrun; to be thronged.

These garrisons you have now planted throughout all Ireland, and every place swarms with soldiers.

Spenser.

Her lower region swarms with all sort of fowl,
her rivers with fish, and her seas with whole shoals.

Howel.

Those days swarmed with fables, and from such ground took hints for fictions, poisoning the world ever after.

Brown.

Late swarms with ills, the boldest are afraid,
Where then is pity for a tender maid?

Young.

Of battle. Milton
4 Power; rule; dominion.

History had some fear that the filling up the seats in the consistory with to great number of laymen, was but to please the minds of the people, to the end they might think their own sway somewhat. Hooker.

Only retain

The name and all the addition to a king;
The long, revenue, execution of the best,
Beloved sons, be yours. Shakspere.

Her father counts it dangerous

That she should give her sorrow so much sway,
As in his wisdom hastes our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakspere.

Truly, Camerlane's successors they;
I think a world too little for his sway. Dryden.
When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honour is a private station. Addison.

5 Influence; direction; weight on one side.

In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time; other odds there was none, Seeing that some fell sooner, and some later, from the shackles of belief. Hooker.

An evil mind in authority doth not only follow
the sway of the desires already within it, but frames to itself new desires not before thought of. Saunders.
They rush along, the rattling wheels give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy sway. Dryden.

part. pass. sworn. [swaran, Gothick;
swepnan, Saxon; swaeren, Dutch.]

1. To obtest some superiour power; to enter an oath.
If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word. Numbers.

These, these an hundred languages shall claim,
And savage Indians swear by Anna's name. Tickel.
2. To declare or promise upon oath.

We shall have old swearing
That they did give the rings away to men;
But we'll outface them, and outwear them too. Shakspere.

I gave my love a ring, and made him swear
Never to part with it; and here his hands,
I dare be sworn for him, he would not leave it,
Nor pluck it from his finger. Shakspere.

I would have kept my word,
But, when I swear, it is irrevocable. Shakspere.
Jacob said, swear to me; and he swore unto him Genesis.

Bacchus taken at Rhodes by Demetrius Polior-cetes, which he so esteemed, that, as Plutarch reports, he swore he had rather lose all his father's images than that table. Peacham.

3. To give evidence upon oath.

At what else
Might corrupt minds procure knives as corrupt
To swear against you? Shakspere.

4. To obtest the great name profanely.
Be careful of swearing the land mourns. Jer.
Obey thy parents, keep thy word jolly, Swear not. Shakspere.

None so nearly disposed to scoffing at religion, as those who have accustomed themselves to swear on trifling occasions.
Think 't the shrill notes transpire the yielding air,
And teach the neighbouring echoes how to swear. Young.

To SWEAR. v. a.

1. To put to an oath; to bind by an oath administered.

Moses took the bones of Joseph; for he had sworn to the children of Israel. Exodus.

And, to conceal my shame, conceal my life. Dryd.

2. To declare upon oath: as, he swore treason against his friend.

3. To obtest by an oath.
Now, by Apollo, king, thou swear'st thy gods in vain.

—O vassal! miscreant! Shakspere.

SWEARER. n. f. [from swear.] A wretch who obtests the great name wantonly and profanely.

And mark they all he hang'd that swear and he —Every one.

—Who must hang them?

—Why, the honest men.

—Then the huns and swearers are fools; for there are huns and swearers even to beat the honest men, and hang them up. Shakspere.

Take not his name, who made thy mouth, in
vain:

It gets thee nothing, and hath no excuse;
Lust and wine plead a pleasure, advance a gain,
But the cheap swearer through his open throat
Lets his soul run for naught. Herbert.

Of all men a philosopher should be no swearer, for an oath, which is the end of all controversies in law, cannot determine any here, where reason only must induce. Bacon.

It is the opinion of our most refined swears, that the same oath or curse cannot, consistently with true piety, be repeated above nine times in the same company by the same person. Swift.

SWEAT. n. f. [sweat, Saxon; suat,
Dutch.]

pores, comes to be checked and condensed by the air on the superficies of it, as it happens to sweat on the skins of animals.

Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid
In balmy sweat. Milton.

When Lucina brandishes his pen,
And flashes to the face of guilty men,
A cold sweat stands in drops on ev'ry part;
And rage succeeds to tears, revenge to smart.

Dryden.

Sweat is produced by changing the balance between the fluids and solids, in which health consists,
so as that projectile motion of the fluids overcome the resistance of the solids. Arbuthnot.

2. Labour; toil; drudgery.

This painful labour of abridging was not easy,
but a matter of sweat and watching. Maccabees.
The field

To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd.

Milton.

What from Jonson's oil and sweat did flow,
Or what more early nature did bestow
On Shakspere's gentler muse, in these full grown Their graces both appear. Danham.

3. Evaporation of moisture.

Beans give in the mow, and therefore those that are to be kept are not to be thrashed till March, that they have had a thorough sweat in the mow.
Mortimer.

and looking wildly, would needs speak with you.
Shakspere.

When he was brought again to the bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was sur'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely. Shaksp.

About this time in Autumn, there reigned in the city and other parts of the kingdom a disease then new, which, of the accidents and manner thereof, they called the sweating sickness. Bacon.

A young tall figure
Did from the camp at first before him go;
At first he did, but scarce could follow him,
Sweating beneath a shield's untroly weight. Cowley.

2. To toil; to labour; to drudge.

How the drudging goblin toils
To earn his cream bowl duly set;
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy had hath thrush'd the corn. Milton.

Our author, not content to see
That others write as carelessly as he;
Though he pretends not to make things complete,
Yet, to please you, he'd have the poet sweat. Waller.

The blustering winds hurrying for victory sweep the snow from off the tops of those high mountains, and cast it down into the plains in such abundance, that the Turks lay as men buried alive. Knolles.

Flying bullets now
To execute his rage appear too slow;
They miss or sweep but common souls away;
For such a loss Opdum his life must pay. Waller.
My looking is the fire of persecution,
That sweeps at once the people and the prince. Dryden.

I have already swept the stakes, and with the common good fortune of the generous gamblers can be content to sit. Dryden.

Is this the man who drives me before him
To the world's ridge, and sweeps me off like rubbish? Dryden.

Foot! time no change of motion knows;
With equal speed the torrent flows
To sweep fame, power, and wealth away;
The past is all by death posset,
And frugal fate that guards the rest,
By giving, bids them live, to-day. Fenton.
A duke holding in a great many hands, drew a huge heap of gold; but never observed a sharper, who under his arm swept a great deal of it into his hat. Suif.

Mauritania, on the hilt medal, leads a horse with something like a thread; in her other hand
she holds a switch.
Addison.

TO SWOON. v. a. [from the noun.] To lull; to jerk.

Lay thy bridle's weight
Most of thy left side; thy right horse then switch- ing, all thy throat Spent in encouragements give him; and all the rein let float.
Chapman.

SWIVEL. n. f. Something fixed in another body so as to turn round in it.

SWOBBER. n. f. [See SWABBER.]
r. A sweeper of the deck.

Cubb'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid,
On a brown george with lousy swobbers led.
Dryden.

Four privileged cards that are only incidentally used in betting at the game of whist.

The clergyman used to play at whist and swobbers:
playing now and then a sober game at whist for pastime, it might be pardoned; but he could not digest those wicked swobbers.
Swift.

SWOLLEN. } The participle passive of SWOON. } swell.

Unto his aid the hastily did draw.
The dreadful beast, who swells, with blood of life,
Came ramping forth with proud presumptuous gait.
Spenser.

When thus the gather'd forms of wretched love
In my swollen bosom with long war had strove,
At length they broke their bounds; at length their force

Bore down whatever met its stronger course;
Laid all the civil bonds of manhood waste,
And scatter'd ruin as the torrent past.
Prior.

Whereas at first we had only three of these principles, their number is already swollen to five.
Baker.

SWOM. The preterit of swim.
TO SWOON. v. n. [apponun, Saxon.] To suffer a suspension of thought and sensation; to faint.

So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons;
Come all to help him, and to stop the air
By which he should revive.
Shakespeare.

If thou stand'st not 'till the state of humming, or of some death more long in expectation, and crueler in suffering, behold now presently, and swim for what's to come upon thee.
Shakespeare.

We see the great and sudden effect of smells in fetching men again, when they swim.
Bacon.

The most swimming swim'd first away for pain.
Dryden.

Then, fear'd, cover'd a spoke.
The woman said it all a trick,
That he could swim when she was sick;
And knows that in that grief he reckon'd
On black-eyed death for his second.
Prior.

There appears such an ecstasy in his action, that he seem'd swim to swim away in the torpor of joy.
Tatler.

SWOON. n. f. [from the verb.] A hypo-thymy; a fainting fit.

TO SWOOP. v. a. [I suppose formed from
the sound.]

1. To seize by falling at once as a hawk upon his prey.

A fowl in Madagascar, called a ruck, the feathers of whose wings are twelve paces, can with as much ease swop up an elephant as our lites do a mouse.
Withins.

This *swop*ring procedure in your hands did fall,
And swop the first you came to swop it all.
Dryden.

2. To prey upon; to catch up.

The physician looks with another eye on the medicinal herb than the grazing ox, which swops it in with the common grass.
Clautville.

3. To pass with violence. Not used.
The nine-foot trophy thus whilst the dash entertain,

Proud Tamer swops along with such a lusty train,
As fits to brave a flood.
Dryden.

SWOOP. n. f. [from the verb.] Fall of a bird of prey upon his quarry.

All my pretty ones?
Did you say all? What all? O hellkite! all?
What, all my pretty chickens and their dam,
At one fell swop?
Shakespeare.

The eagle fell into the fox's quarters, and carried away a whole litter of cubs at a swop.
L'Estrange.

TO SWOP. v. a. [Of uncertain derivation.]
To change; to exchange one thing for another. A low word.

When I drove a thrust home, he put it by,
And cried, as in derision, spare the thrupping;
Oh that infusing word! I would have swopp'd
Youth for old age, and all my life behind,
To have been then a momentary man.
Dryden.

SWORD. n. f. [from swerd, Saxon; swerd,
Dutch.]

1. A weapon used either in cutting or thrusting; the usual weapon of fights hand to hand.

Old unhappy traitor, the sword is out
That must destroy thee.
Shakespeare.

Each man took his sword, and slew all the males.
Genius.

But the sword
Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was giv'n him temper'd so, that neither keen Nor solid might resist that edge: it met
The sword of Satan with steep force to smite
Defending, and in half cut thee; nor stay'd,
But with swift wheel reverse, deep entering fear'd
All his right side: then Satan first knew pain,
And with'd him to and fro convolv'd; to fore
The griding sword with discontinuous wound
Puls'd through him.
Milton.

2. Destruction by war: as fire and sword.
The sword without, and terror within.
Deut.

3. Vengeance of justice.
Justice to merit does weak aid afford,
She quits the balance, and reclaims the sword.
Dryden.

4. Emblem of authority.
Thus I, her sword bearer, do carry,
For civil deed and military Hudibras.

SWORDED. adj. [from sword.] Girt with a sword.

The sworded seraphim
Are seen in glittering ranks with wings display'd.
Milton.

SWORDER. n. f. [from sword.] A cut-throat; a soldier. In contempt.
A Roman sworder and banditto slave Murder'd sweet Tully.
Shakespeare.

Clear will Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd to th' new Agonist a sworder.
Shakespeare.

SWORDFISH. n. f. [from sword.] A fish with a long sharp bone issuing from his head.

A swordfish small him from the rest did sunder,
That in his throat him pricking tottly under,
His wide aby's him forced forth to spew.
S. enser.

Malpighi observed the middle of the optick nerve of the swordfish to be a large membrane, folded,
according to its length, in many doubles, like a fan.
Derham.

Our little fleet was now engag'd to far,
That like the swordfish in the whale they fought;
The combat only seem'd a civil war,
Till through their bowels we our passage wrought.
Dryden.

SWORDGRASS. n. f. [gladiolus.] A kind of sedge; glader.

SWORDKNOT. n. f. [sword and knot.]
Riband tied to the hilt of the sword.

Wipe with wipe, swallow with swallow drive,
Beans banish bones, and coaches coaches drive.

SWORDLAW. n. f. Violence; the law by which all is yielded to the stronger.
So violence

Proceeded, and oppression, and swordlaw,
Through all the plains, and refuge none was found.
Milton.

SWORDMAN. n. f. [sword and man.]
Soldier; fighting man.

Worthy fellows, and like to prove most worthy swordmen.
Shakespeare.

At Lecca's house,
Among your swordmen, where so many associates
Both of thy mischief and thy madness met.
Ben Jonson.

Effes was made lieutenant-general of the army,
the darling of the swordmen.
Clarendon.

SWORDBLAYER. n. f. [sword and play.]

SWORN. The preterit of swear.
How soon unsay
What feign'd submission swore.
Milton.

SWORN. The participle passive of swear.
What does else want credit, come to me,
And I'll be sworn 'tis true.
Shakespeare.

I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grin necessity; and be and I
Will keep a league till death.
Shakespeare.

They that are mad against me, are sworn against me.
Hakewell.

He refused not the civil offer of a Plinian, though his sworn enemy; and would cut at the ble of those who fought his ruin.
Calamy.

To shelter innocence,
The nation all elects some patron-knight,
sworn to be true to love, and slave to fame,
And many a valiant chief enrols his name.
Groom.

SYN. adj. [properly fib, rib, Saxon.] Related by blood. The Scottish dialect still retains it.

If what my grandfire to me said, be true,
Siker I am very fib to you.
Spenser.

SYCAMINE. n. f. A tree. The sycamore SYCAMORE. } of scripture is not the same with ours.

Sycamore is our acer majus, one of the kinds of maples: it is a quick grower.

If ye had faith as a grain of must seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, be thou pluck'd up, and it should obey you.
Milton.

I was no prophet, but as herdsman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit.

Go to yonder sycamore-tree, and hide your battle of drunk under its hollow root.

Sycamores with cypressine were spread,
A hedge about the sides, a covering over head.
Dryden.

SYCOPIANT. n. f. [συκοφαντης sycophanta, Latin.] A talebearer; a make bate; a malicious parasite.

Accusing sycophants of all men, did best last to his nature; but therefore not seeming sycophants because of no evil they said; they could bring up new or doubtful thing unto him, but such as already he had been apt to determine; so as they came but as proofs of his wisdom, fearful and more fearful while the fear he had figured in his mind had any possibility of event.

the independent symploche, at the same time, both symploche to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing.

SYMPLOCHIC. v. n. [συμπλοχικός; from the noun.] To play the symploche. A low bad word.

The symploche arts bring detected, that game is not to be played the second time; whereas a man of clear reputation, though his barque be split, has something left towards setting up again.

SYMPLOCHIC. adj. [from symploche.] Talebearing; mischievously officious.

SYMPLOCHIC. v. n. [συμπλοχικός; from symploche.] To play the talebearer.

SYLLABICAL. adj. [syllabique, French; from syllable.] Relating to syllables; consisting of syllables.

SYLLABICALLY. adv. [from syllabical.] In a syllabical manner.

SYLLABLE. n. f. [συλλαβή; syllabe, French.]

1. As much of a word as is uttered by the help of one vowel, or one articulation.

Each syllable that breath made up between them.

There is that property in all letters of syllables to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it.

2. Any thing proverbially concise.

Abraham, Job, and the rest that lived before any syllable of the law of God was written, did they not in as much as we do in every action not commended?

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow, Crops in this potty pace from day to day, To the last syllable of recorded time; And all our yesterdays have lighted fools The way to dusty death.

He hath told to many melancholy stories, with one syllable of truth, that he hath blunted the edge of my fears.

TO SYLLABLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To utter; to pronounce; to articulate.

Not in use.

Any tongues that syllable men's names

On sands and shores, and desert wildernesses.

SYLLABUS. n. f. [rightly SILLABUS, which see.] Milk and acids.

No syllabus made at the milking pail, But what are compos'd of a pot of good ale.

Two lines would express all they say in two pages: 'tis nothing but whipt syllabus and froth, without solidity.

SYLLABUS. n. f. [συλλαβός.] An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse.

SYLLOGISM. n. f. [συλλογισμός; syllogisme, French.] An argument composed of three propositions: as, every man thinks; Peter is a man, therefore Peter thinks.

A piece of rhetoric is a sufficient argument of logic, an apologue of Syllogism beyond a Syllogism in Barbara.

What a miraculous thing should we count it, if the flag and the steel, instead of a few sparks, should chance to knock out definitions and syllogisms!

SYLLOGISTICAL. adj. [συλλογιστικός; from syllogism.] Relating to a syllogism; consisting of a syllogism.

Though we suppose subject and predicate, and copula, and propositions and syllogistical conclusions in their reasoning, there is no such matter; but the idle business is at the same moment present with them, without deducing one thing from another.

Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple syllogism, since the complexion does not belong to the syllogistical form of it.

SYLLOGISTICAL. adv. [from syllogistical.] In the form of a syllogism.

A man knows first, and then he is able to prove syllogistically; so that syllogism comes after knowledge, when a man has no need of it.

TO SYLLOGIZE. v. n. [syllogizer, French; συλλογίζω.] To reason by syllogism.

Logic is, in effect, an art of syllogizing.

Men have endeavour'd to transform logic into a kind of mechanism, and to teach boys to syllogize, or frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge.

SYLVAN. adj. [better silvan.] Woody; shady; relating to woods.

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm, A sylvan scene! and, as the ranks ascend, Shade above shade, a woody theatre

Of stateliest view.

Eternal greens the mossy margin grace, Watch'd by the sylvan genius of the place.

SYLVAN. n. f. [syllain, French.] A wood-god, or deity; perhaps sometimes a rustic.

Her private orchards, wall'd on ev'ry side, To lawless syllains all access deny'd.

SYMBOL. n. f. [symbole, Fr. σύμβολον; symbolum, Latin.]

1. An abstract; a compendium; a comprehensive form.

Beginning with the symbol of our faith, upon that the author of the gloss enquires into the nature of faith.

2. A type; that which comprehends in its figure a representation of something else.

Salt, as incorruptible, was the symbol of friendship; which, if it casually fell, was accounted ominous, and their amity of no duration.

Words are the signs and symbols of things; and as, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so words and names pass for things themselves.

The heathens made choice of those lights as apt symbols of eternity, because, contrary to all sublunary beings, though they seem to perish every night, they renew themselves every morning.

SYMBOLICAL. adj. [symbolique, French; συμβολικός; from symbol.] Representative; typical; expressing by signs; comprehending something more than itself.

By this encroachment idolatry first crept in, men converting the symbolical use of idols into their proper worship, and receiving the representation of things unto them as the substance and thing itself.

The sacrament is a representation of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as himself appointed.

SYMBOLICALLY. adv. [from symbolical.] Typically; by representation.

This distinction of animals was hieroglyphical, in the inward sense implying an abundance from certain uses, symbolically intimated from the nature of those animals.

It symbolically teaches our duty, and promotes charity by a real signature, and a sensible sermon.

SYMBOLIZATION. n. f. [from symbolize.] The act of symbolizing; representation; resemblance.

The hieroglyphical symbols of scripture, excellently intimated in the species of things sacrificed in the dreams of Pharaoh, are oftentimes racked beyond their symbolizations.

TO SYMBOLIZE. v. n. [symbolizer, Fr. from symbol.] To have something in common with another by representative qualities.

Our king finding himself to symbolize by many things with that king of the Hebrews, honoured him with the title of this foundation.

The pleasing of colour symbolizeth with the pleasing of any single tone to the ear; but the pleasing of order doth symbolize with harmony.

Antiole and the schools have taught, that air and water, being symbolizing elements, in the quality of moisture, are easily transmutable into one another.

They both symbolize in this, that they live to look upon themselves through multiplying passion.

I affectedly symbolized in careless mirth and freedom with the libertines, to circumvent libertinism.

The soul is such, that it strangely symbolizes with the thing it mightily desires.

TO SYMBOLIZE. v. a. To make representative of something.

Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colours.

SYMMETRIC. adj. [from symmetry.] One eminently studious of proportion.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetry would allow.

SYMMETRICAL. adj. [from symmetry.] Proportionate; having parts well adapted to each other.

SYMMETRIST. n. f. [from symmetry.] One very studious or observant of proportion.

Some exact symmetrists have been blamed for being too true.

SYMMETRY. n. f. [symmetrie, Fr. συμμετρία.] Adaption of parts to each other; proportion; harmony; agreement of one part to another.

She by whose lines proportion should be Exam'd, measure of all symmetry; Whom had that ancient Icen, who thought souls made

Of harmony, he would at next have said That harmony was she.

And in the symmetry of her parts is found A power, like that of harmony and sound.

Symmetrie, equality, and correspondence of parts, is the discernment of reason, not the object of sense.

Nor were they only animated by him, but their measure and symmetry were owing to him.

SYMPATHETICAL. adj. [sympathetique, Fr. from sympatheia.] Having mutual sensation; being affected either by what happens to the other; feeling in consequence of what another feels.

Hecuphon are grounded the sympathetic mistakes in the cure of diseases, not only sympathetic receipts, but amulets, charms, and all incantatory applications.

United by this sympathetic bond, You grow familiar, intimate, and good.

To confer at the distance of the Indus by sympathetic conveyances, may be as usual to future times as to us in a literary correspondence.

To you our author makes her first request, Who speak the kindest, and who write the best: Your sympathetic hearts the hopes to move, From tender friendship and endearing love.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves, and sympathetical and vital passions produced within ourselves.

SYMPATHETICALLY. adv. [from sympathetick.] With sympathy; in consequence of sympathy.

S Y M

To SYMPATHIZE. v. n. [Sympathizer, Fr. from sympathy.]

1. To feel with another; to feel in consequence of what another feels; to feel mutually.

The men sympathize with the maliffs in robustious and rough coming on. Shakespeare.

Nature, in awe to him, Hath do'd her gaudy trim, With her great maker to sympathize. Milton.

The limbs of his body is to every one a part of himself: he sympathizes, and is concerned for them. Luthe.

Their countrymen were particularly attentive to all their story, and sympathized with their heroes in all their adventures. Spectator.

Though the great acts of their mind exempt them from fear, yet none could do and sympathize more heartily. Collier.

2. To agree; to fit. Not proper.

Green is a pleasing colour, from a blue and a yellow mixed together, and by consequence blue and yellow are two colours which sympathize. Dryden.

SYMPATHY. n. f. [Sympathie, Fr. συμπάθεια.] Fellow-feeling; mutual sensibility; the quality of being affected by the affection of another.

A world of earthly blessings to my soul, If sympathy of love unite our thoughts. Shakespeare.

You are not young; no more am I: go to, then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I; ha! ha! then there's more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy? Shakespeare.

But what it is, The action of my life is like it, which I'll keep, If but for sympathy. Shakespeare.

I started back; It started back: but, pleas'd, I soon return'd; Pleas'd it return'd as soon, with answering looks Of sympathy and love. Milton.

They saw, but other light instead, a crowd Of ugly serpents; horror on them fell, And horrid sympathy. Milton.

Or sympathy, or some connat'ral force, Pow'ful at greatest distance to unite, With secret amity, things of like kind, By secret conveyance. Milton.

There never was any heart truly great and generous, that was not also tender and compassionate: it is this noble quality that makes all men to be of one kind; for every man would be a distinct species to himself, were there no sympathy among individuals. Scott.

Can kindness to desert like your's be strange? Kindness by secret sympathy is ty'd; For noble souls in nature are ally'd. Dryden.

There are such affections made in the minds of most men; and to this might be attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in them. Luthe.

SYMPHONIOUS. adj. [from symphony.] Harmonious; agreeing in sound.

Up he rode, Follow'd with acclamation and the sound Symphonious of ten thousand harps, that tun'd Angelick harmonies. Milton.

SYMPHONIC. n. f. [Symphonic, Fr. σύν and φωνή.] Concert of instruments; harmony of mingled sounds.

A learned searcher from Pythagoras's school, where it was a maxim that the images of all things are latent in numbers, determines the concert proportion between breadths and heights, reducing symmetry to sympphony, and the harmony of sound to a kind of harmony in sight. Wotton.

Speak, ye who best can tell, ye sons of light, Angels! for ye behold him, and with songs And choral symphonies, day without night, Circle his throne rejoicing. Milton.

The trumpets sound, And warlike sympphony is heard around; The marching troops through Athens take their way; The great earl marshal orders their array. Dryden.

SYMPHYISIS. n. f. [σύν and φύσις.]

Symphyisis, in its original signification, denotes a connecency, or growing together; and perhaps is meant of those bones which in young children are distinct, but after some years unite and consolidate into one bone. Wisejan.

SYMPOSIAC. adj. [Sympotiacus, Fr. συμποσιακός.] Relating to merrymakings; happening where company is drinking together.

By desiring a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we only mean in society and comotation, from the ancient custom of symposiack meetings to wear chaplets of roses about their heads. Brown.

In some of those symposiack disputations amongst my acquaintance, I assumed that the dietetick part of medicine depended upon scientific principles. Arbutnot.

SYMPTOM. n. f. [Symptome, French; σύμπτωμα.]

1. Something that happens concurrently with something else, not as the original cause, nor as the necessary or constant effect.

The symptoms, as Dr. Sydenham remarks, which are commonly febrile, are often nothing but the principles or seeds of a growing, but unripe gout. Blackmoor.

2. A sign; a token.

Ten glorious campaigns are passed, and now, like the sick man, we are expiring with all sorts of good symptoms. Swift.

SYMPTOMATIC. } adj. [Symptomatique, Fr. from symptom.] Happening concurrently or occasionally.

Symptomatical is often used to denote the difference between the primary and secondary causes in disease; as a fever from pain is said to be symptomatical, because it arises from pain only; and therefore the ordinary means in fevers are not in such cases to be had recourse to, but to what will remove the pain; for, when that ceases, the fever will cease, without any direct means taken for that. Quincy.

By fermentation and a cataplasm the swelling was diffused; and the fever, then appearing but symptomatical, lessened as the heat and pain abated. Wisejan.

SYMPTOMATICALLY. adv. [from symptomatical.] In the nature of a symptom.

The causes of a hube are vicious humours abounding in the blood, or in the nerves, excreted sometimes critically, sometimes symptomatically. Wisejan.

SYNAGOGICAL. adj. [from synagogue.] Pertaining to a synagogue.

SYNAGOGUE. n. f. [Synagogue, Fr. συναγωγή.] An assembly of the Jews to worship.

Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue. Shakespeare.

As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath. Goff, cl.

SYNALIPHA. n. f. [συναλοιφή.] A contraction or excision of a syllable in Latin verse, by joining together two vowels in the scanning, or cutting off the ending vowel; as, ill' ego.

Vugil, though smooth, is far from affecting it: he frequently uses synaliphas, and concludes his sense in the middle of his verse. Dryden.

SYNARTHROSIS. n. f. [σύν and ἄρθρον.] A close conjunction of two bones.

There is a conspicuous motion where the conjunction is called diarthrosis, as in the elbow; an obscure one, where the conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Wisejan.

SYNCHONDROSIS. n. f. [σύν and χόνδρος.] Synchondrosis is an union by gristle, of the sternon to the ribs. Wisejan.

S Y N

SYNCHRONICAL. adj. [σύν and χρονικός.]

Happening together at the same time. It is difficult to make out how the air conveyed into the left ventricle of the heart, the systole and diastole of the heart and lungs being far from synchronical. Boyle.

SYNCHRONISM. n. f. [σύν and χρονισμός.] Concurrence of events happening at the same time.

The coherence and synchronism of all the parts of the Mosical chronology, after the flood, bear a most regular testimony to the truth of his history. Hale.

SYNCHRONOUS. adj. [σύν and χρονός.] Happening at the same time.

The variations of the gravity of the air keep both the solids and fluids in an oscillatory motion, synchronous and proportional to their changes. Arbutnot.

SYNCOPE. n. f. [Syncope, Fr. συνκοπή.]

1. Fainting fit. The symptoms attending gunshot wounds are pain, fever, delirium, and syncope. Wisejan.

2. Contraction of a word by cutting off a part in the middle.

SYNCOPIST. n. f. [from syncope.] Contractor of words.

To outline all the modern syncopists, and thoroughly content my English readers, I intend to publish a Spectator that shall not have a single vowel in it. Spectator.

To SYNDICATE. v. n. [Syndiquer, Fr. σύν and δικάω.] To judge; to pass judgment on; to censure. An unusual word. Not in use.

Aristotle undertook to censure and syndicate his master, and all law-makers before him. Hakewell.

SYNDROME. n. f. [συνδρομή.] Concurrent action; concurrence.

All things being linked together by an uninterrupted chain of causes, every single motion owes a dependance on such a syndrome of prequired motions. Glanville.

SYNECDOCHE. n. f. [Synecdoche, Fr. συνεκδοχή.] A figure by which part is taken for the whole, or the whole for part.

Because they are instruments of grace in the hand of God, and by these his holy spirit changes our hearts; therefore the whole work is attributed to them by a synecdoche; that is, they do in a manner the work for which God ordained them. Taylor.

SYNECDOCHICAL. adj. [from synecdoche.] Expressed by a synecdoche; implying a synecdoche.

Should I, Lindamer, bring you into hospitals, and show you there how many souls, narrowly led, a synecdochical bodies, see then earthen caskets moulder away to dust, those miserable persons, by the loss of one limb after another, surviving but part of themselves, and living to see themselves dead and buried by piecemeal? Exile.

SYNEURYSIS. n. f. [σύν and ὑπόσις.]

Syneurysis is when the connexion is made by a ligament. Of this in symplysis we find instance in the connexion of the ossa pubis together, especially in women, by a ligamentous substance. In articulation, it is either round, as that which unites the head of the os femoris to the coxa; or broad, as the tendon of the patella, which unites it to the os tibiae. Wisejan.

SYNOD. n. f. [Synode, Fr. σύνδος.]

1. An assembly called for consultation: it is used particularly of ecclesiastics. A provincial synod is commonly used, and a general council.

The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity. Shakespeare.

Since the mortal and intestine jars Twixt thy feditious countrymen and us, It hath in solemn synod been decreed, T' admit no traffick to our adverse town. Shakespeare.

The episcopate was not only condemned by the synod, but imputed to the emperor as extreme mad-Beacon.

Flas-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerics and elders ana, like the rude
Chaos of presbytry, where laymen guide,
With the same woolpack clergy by their side.
Cleveland.

His royal majesty, according to these presbyterian rules, shall have no power to command his clergy to keep a national synod.
White.

Well have ye judg'd, well ended long debate,
Squad of gods! and, like to what ye are,
Grazing things resolve'd.
Milton.

Let us call to synod all the blest
Through heav'n's wide bounds.
Milton.
The second council of Nice, he saith, I most irresistibly call that wise synod; upon which he falls into a very tragical exclamation, that I should dare to reflect so much dishonour on a council.
Stillingfleet.

Parent of gods and men, propitious Jove!
And you bright synod of the powers above,
On this my son your gracious gifts bestow.
Dryden.

Conjunction of the heavenly bodies.
Howe'er love's native hours are let,
Whatever starry synod met,
Tis in the mercy of her eye,
If poor love shall live or die.
Cragshaw.

The planetary motions and aspects
Of various efficacy, and when to join
In synod unbeweg'd.
Milton.
As the planets and stars have, according to astrologers, in their great synods, or conjunctions, much more powerful influences on the air than are ascribed to one or two of them out of that aspect; so divers particulars, which, whilst they lay scattered among the writings of several authors, were inconsiderable, when they come to be laid together, may oftentimes prove highly useful to physiology in their conjunctions.
Boyle.

SYNODAL. n. f. [from synod.] Money paid anciently to the bishop, &c. at Easter visitation.
SYNODAL. } adj. [synodique, Fr. from SYNODICAL. } synodi.
SYNODICK. }
Relating to synod; transacted in a synod.

The various dignity of their several churches, and of their many functions, rules, and orders in them, by reason of the frequency of their synodical and provincial meetings, have necessarily raised many questions of place among them.
Selden.

St. Athanasius writes a synodical epistle to those of Antioch, to compose the differences among them upon the ordination of Paulinus.
Stillingfleet.

[Synodique, Fr.] Reckoned from one conjunction with the sun to another.

The diurnal and annual revolutions of the sun, to us are the measures of day and year; and the synodical revolution of the moon measures the month.
Holler.

The moon makes its synodical motion about the earth in twenty-nine days twelve hours and about forty-four minutes.
Lacke.

SYNODICALLY. adv. [from synodical.]
By the authority of a synod or publick assembly.

It shall be needful for those churches synodically to determine something in those points.

words.

This word fortis we may synonymise after all these fashions, stout, hardy, valiant, doughty, courageous, adventurous, brave, bold, daring, intrepid.
Camden.

SYNONYMOUS. adj. [synonymic, French;
συνώνυμοι.] Expressing the same thing
by different words.

When two or more words signify the same thing, as wave and billow, mead and meadow, they are usually called synonymous words.

These words consist of two propositions, which are not distinct in sense, but one and the same thing variously expressed, for wisdom and understanding are synonymous words here.
Tillotson.

Fortune is but a synonymous word for nature and necessity.
Bentley.

SYNONYMY. n. f. [συνωνυμία.] The quality of expressing by different words the same thing.

together.

They owe no other dependence to the first than what is common to the whole syntax of beings.
Glanville.

2. That part of grammar which teaches the construction of words.

I can produce a hundred instances to convince any reasonable man, that they do not to much as understand common grammar and syntax.
Nutt.

SYNTHE'SIS. n. f. [σύνθεσις.] The act of joining; opposed to analysis.

The synthesis consists in assuming the causes discovered and established as principles, and by them explaining the phenomena proceeding from them and proving the explanations.
Newton.

SYNTHETICK. adj. [συνθετικὸς.] Con-joining; compounding; forming composition; opposed to analytick.

Synthetic method is that which begins with the parts, and leads onward to the knowledge of the whole: it begins with the most simple principles and general truths, and proceeds by degrees to that which is drawn from them, or compounded of them, and therefore it is called the method of composition.
Watts.

SY'PHON. n. f. [This should be written siphon; σίφων.] A tube; a pipe.

Take your glass, siphon, or crane; and draw it off from its last faces into small bottles.
Martimer.

SY'RINGER. n. f. [σίριγξ.] A pipe through which any liquor is squirted.

The heart seems not designed to be the fountain-or conservatory of the vital flame, but as a machine to receive the blood from the veins, and force it out by the arteries through the whole body, as a syringe doth any liquor, though not by the same artifice.
Ray.

To SY'RINGER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To spout by a syringe.
A flux of blood from the nose, mouth, and eye, order.

He presently bought a system of divinity, with design to apply himself straightway to that study.
Felt.

Aristotle brings morality into system, by treating of happiness under heads, and ranges it in classes according to its different objects, distinguishing virtues into then several kinds, which had not been handled systematically before.
Baker.

The best way to learn any science is to begin with a regular system, or a short and plain scheme of that science well drawn up into a narrow compass.
Watts.

SYSTEMA'TICAL. adj. [système, Fr. système.]
Methodical; written or formed with regular subordination of one part to another.

It will be necessary, in a discourse about the formation of the world, to give you a brief account of some of the most principal and systematical phenomena that occur in it.
Bentley.

Now we deal much in essays, and unreasonably despise systematic learning; whereas, our fathers had a just value for regularity and systems.
Watts.

SYSTEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from systema-tical.] In form of a system.

I treat of the usefulness of writing books of essays,
in comparison of that of writing systematically.
Boyle.

Aristotle brings morality into system, and ranges
it into classes according to its different objects, distinguishing virtues into their several kinds, which had not been handled systematically before.
Baker.

SYSTOLE. n. f. [σύστολη, Fr. systole.]

ing to the different ages and countries.

Arbutnot.
Five talents in his debt,
His means most short, his creditors most straight. Shakspere.

Two tripods cast in antick mould,
With two great talents of the finest gold. Dryden.

2. Faculty; power; gift of nature. A metaphor borrowed from the talents mentioned in the holy writ. It is used sometimes seriously, and sometimes lightly.

Many who knew the treasurer's talent in removing prejudice, and reconciling himself to wavering affections, believed the loss of the duke was un-feasible. Clarendon.

He is chiefly to be considered in his three different talents, as a critic, satirist, and writer of odes. Dryden.

'Tis not my talent to conceal my thoughts
Or carry smiles and sunshine in my face, &c.
When discontent sits heavy at my heart. Addison.

They are out of their element, and logic is none of their talent. Baker.

Persons who possess the true talent of military use like comets; they are seldom seen, and all at once admired and feared. Female Quixote.

He, Agellus, though otherwise a very worthy man, yet having no talent for disputation, recommended Simulus, his lecturer, to engage in a conference. Wutsland.

3. Quality; disposition. An improper and mistaken use.

Though the nation generally was without any ill talent to the church in doctrine or discipline, yet they were not without a jealousy that property was not enough discountenanced. Clarendon.

It is the talent of human nature to run from one extreme to another. Swift.

TALISMAN. n. f. [I know not whence derived: talasman, Skinner.] A magical character.

If the physicians would forbid us to pronounce gout, rheumatism, and stone, would that serve like so many talismans to destroy the disease? Swift.

Of talismans and signs knew the powers,
And careful watch'd the planetary hour. Pope.

TALISMANICK. adj. [from talisman.] Magicical.

The figure of a heart bleeding upon an altar, or hid in the hand of a Cupid, has always been looked upon as talismanick in direction of the nature.

Addison.

To TALK. v. n. [talen, Dutch.]

1. To speak in conversation; to speak fluently and familiarly, not in set speeches; to converse.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you; but I will not eat with you. Shakspere.

Now is this vice's dagger become a quize, and talks so familiarly of John of Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and he never saw him but once. Shakspere.

The prince refrained talking, and laid their hand on their mouth. Jah.

The children of thy people still talk against thee.

Ezekiel.

Here free from court-compliances he walks.

And with himself, his best adviser, talks.

As God remembers that we are but flesh, unable to hear the nearer approaches of divinity, and so talks with us as once with Moïse through a cloud;

so he forgets not that he breathed into us the breath of life, a vital active spirit.

Decay of Piety.

Mention the king of Spain, he talks very notably;

but if you go out of the Gazette you drop him.

Addison.

5. To prattle; to speak impertinently.

Hypocrites austere talk

Of purity.

My heedless tongue has talk'd away this life

Milton.

Consider well the time when Petavius first began to talk in that manner.

Waterland.

3. To give account.

The crystalline sphere, whose balance weighs

The tripodian talk'd.

We will consider whether Adam had any such heir as our author talks of.

Locke.

4. To speak; to reason; to confer.

Let me talk with thee of thy judgments.

Jeremiah.

Will ye speak wickedly for God, and talk deceitfully for him?

Job.

It is a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses.

Talking over the things which you have read with your companions, lives them upon the mind.

Batts.

TALK. n. f. [from the verb.]

4. Oral conversation; fluent and familiar speech.

We do remember; but our argument is too heavy to admit much talk.

Shakespeare.

Perceiving his soldiers dismayed, he forbade them to have any talk with the enemy.

Kneller.

How can he get wisdom that driveth oxen, is occupied in their labours, and whose talk is of bul-locks?

Eccelesiasticus.

This ought to weigh with those whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge.

In various talk the instructive hours they pass,

Who gave the ball, or paid the visit last.

Pope.

2. Report; rumour.

I hear talk up and down of raising our money,

as a means to return our wealth, and keep our money from being carried away.

Locke.

3. Subject of discourse.

What delight to be by such extoll'd,

To live upon their tongues and be their talk,

Of whom to be despis'd were no small pride?

Milton.

TALK. n. f. [talce, Fr.] A kind of stone.

Stones composed of plates are generally parallel, and flexible and elastic: as, talk, cat-silver or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black.

Boissac.

Venetian talk kept in a heat of a glass furnace,

though brittle and discoloured, had not lost much of its bulk, and seemed nearer of kin to talk than mere earth.

Boyle.

TALKATIVE. adj. [from talk.] Prol of prate; loquacious.

If I have held you overlong, lay hardly the fault upon my old age, which in its disposition is talkative.

Shakespeare.

This may prove an instructive lesson to the dissatisfied, not to build hopes on the talkative zealots of their party.

Addison.

I am situated I cannot make a quicker progress in the French, where every body is so courteous and talkative.

Addison.

The coromond bird is talkative and grave,

That from his cage cries cuckold, whore, and knave;

Though many a passenger he rightly cull,

You hold him no philosopher at all.

Pope.

TALKATIVENESS. n. f. [from talkative.]

Loquacity; garrulity; subsels of prate.

We call this talkativeness a feminine vice; but he that shall appropriate loquacity to women, may perhaps sometimes need to light Diogenes's candle to seek a man.

Government of the Tongue.

Learned women have lost all credit by their impertinent talkativeness and conceit.

Swift.

TALKER. n. f. [from talk.]

1. One who talks.

Let me give for instance some of those writers or talkers who deal much in the worst nature or taste.

Watts.

2. A loquacious person; a prattler.

Keep me company but two years,

Thou shalt not know the sound of thine own tongue.

—Farewell; I'll grow a taller for this year.

Shakespeare.

If it were desirable to have a child a more bulk talker, ways might be found to make him so; but a wife rather had rather his son should be silent

when a man, than pretty company.

Locke.

3. A boaster; a bragging fellow.

The greatest talkers in the days of peace have been the most pusillanimous in the day of temptation.

Taylor.

TALKY. adj. [from talk.] Consisting of talk;

resembling talk.

The talky flakes in the firsts were all formed

before the subsidence, along with the land.

Woodward.

TALL. adj. [tall, Welsh.]

1. High in stature.

Bring word, how tall the is.

Shakespeare.

Two of nobler shape,

2. High; lofty.

Winds rush'd abroad

From the four hinges of the world, and fell

On the vast wilderness, whose tall, stiff pines,

Though rooted deep as high, and sturdied oaks,

How'd their stiff necks.

Milton.

They lop, and lop, on this and that hand, cutting away the tall, found, and substantial timber, that used to shelter them from the winds.

May they encrease as fast, and spread their boughs,

As the high fame of their great owner grows!

May he live long enough to see them all

Dark shadows cast, and as his palace tall!

Yet think I see the love that shall be made,

The lovers walking in that am'rous shade.

Waller.

3. Sturdy; bulky.

I'll swear thou art a tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know thou art

no tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunk, but I would thou wouldst be a tall fellow of thy hands.

Shakespeare.

TALLAGE. n. f. [tallage, French.] Impoit;

excise.

The people of Spain were better affected unto Philip than to Ferdinand, because he had imposed upon them many taxes and tallages.

Baron.

TALLOW. n. f. [talge, Danish.] The grease or fat of an animal; coarse suet.

She's the kitchen wench, and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to, but to make a lump of her, and run from her by her own light

I warrant her rage, and the tallow in them, will burn a Lapland winter.

Shakespeare.

The new world is stocked with such store of kine and bulls, brought hither out of Europe since the first discovery, that the Spaniards kill thousands of them yearly, for their tallow and hides only.

Hentley.

Snuff the candles close to the tallow, which will make them run.

Swift.

TO TALLOW. v. a. [from the noun.] To grease; to smear with tallow.

TALLOWCHANDLER. n. f. [tallow and chandelier, Fr.] One who makes candles of tallow, not of wax.

Nastiness, and several nasty trades, as tallowchandlers, butchers, and neglect of cleansing of gotters, are great occasions of a plague.

Harvey.

TALLY. n. f. [from taller, to cut, Fr.]

1. A stick, notched or cut in conformity to another stick, and used to keep accounts by.

So right his judgment was cut fit,

And made a tally to his wit.

Hudibras.

The only talents in esteem at present are those of Exchange Alley; one tally is worth a grove of bays.

Carr.

Have you not seen a baker's maid

Between two equal pauniers sway'd?

Her tallies usefule he and idle,

It plac'd exactly in the middle.

Prior.

From his rug the skew'r he takes,

And on the stick ten equal notches makes;

With just resentment flings it on the ground,

There take my tally of ten thousand pound.

Swift.

2. Any thing made to suit another.

So suited in their minds and persons,

That they were fram'd the tallies for each other.

It may alien love had interpos'd,

It must have been an eye-sore to beholders.

Decker.

TO TALLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit; to suit; to cut out, so as to answer

any thing.

Not sister either had, nor brother,

They seem'd just tally'd for each other.

Prior.

They are not so well tallied to the present station.

Pope.

TO TALLY. v. n. To be fitted; to conform; to be suitable.

I found pieces of tiles that exactly tallied with the channel.

stature; procerity.

An hideous giant, horrible and high,

That with his talness seem'd to threaten the sky.

Spenser.

The eyes behold so many naked bodies, as be talnesses of stature could hardly be equalled in any country.

Hayward.

TALON. n. f. [talon, Fr.] The claw of a bird of prey.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer talons.

Bacon.

Upward the noble bird directs his wing,

And, towing round his master's earth-born foot,

Swift he collects his fatal flock of prey,

Lifts his fierce talon high, and darts the forked beak.

Prior.

TAMARIND tree. n. f. [tamarindus, Lat.]

The flower of the tamarind-tree exhibits other ven-

leaves, which are so placed as to resemble a papianaceous one in some moisture; but these expand circularly, from whose many-leaved flower-cup

rides the pointal, which afterward becomes a flat

pod, containing many flat angular seeds terminated with an acid black pulp.

Thou art the Mithras child, That of all wild beasts is tyrant in the world, and of all tame beasts a slave.
Addison.

Crushed; subdued; depressed; dejected;
spiritless; heartless.

If you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire it.
Shakespeare.

And now their pride and mettle is asleep,
Their courage with hard labour tame and dull.
Shakespeare.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
And pregnant to good pity.

Pratt's hips, each savage furious beast,
That on his stores do daily feast;
And you, tame slaves of the laborious plough,
Your weary knees to your Creator bow.
Raynham.

Spiritless; unanimated: as, a tame poem. A low phrase.

To TAME. v. n. [gatamgan, Gothick;
tamean, Sax. tammen, Dutch.]

1. To reduce from wildness; to reclaim;
to make gentle.

Those that tame wild horses,
Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle;
But stop their mouths with stubborn bits.
Shakespeare.

2. To subdue; to crush; to depress; to conquer.

If the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame the offences,
Humanity must perforce prey on itself.
Shakespeare.

They cannot tame
Or overcome their riches; not by making Baths, orchards, fish-pools, letting in of seas
Here, and then there forcing them out again.
Ben Jonson.

A puling enckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece.
Shakespeare.

A race unconquer'd, by their climate made bold,
be Caledonians, arm'd with want and cold,
have been for ages kept for you to tame. Waller.

TAMEABLE. adj. [from tame.] Suscep-tive of taming.

Ganzas are supposed to be great fowls, of a strong light, and easily tameable; divers of which may be brought up as to join together in carrying the weight of a man. Wilkins.

TAMELY. adv. [from tame.] Not wildly;
meanly; spiritlessly.

True obedience, of this madness cur'd,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty. Shakespeare.

What courage tamely could to death content,
And not by striking lift the blow prevent?
Dryden.

Once a champion of renown,
So tamely can you bear the ravish'd crown?
Dryden.

Has he given way?
Did he look tamely on, and let them pass?
Addison.

Can you love and reverence your prelate, whom you tamely suffer to be abused?
Swift.

TAMENESS. n. f. [from tame.]

1. The quality of being tame; not wildness.

2. Want of spirits; timidity.
Such a conduct must appear rather like tameness than beauty, and expose his authority to insults.
Rogers.

TAMER. n. f. [from tame.] Conqueror;
subduer.

He, great tamer of all human art,
Dulness! whose good old cause I yet defend. Pope.

TAMING. n. f. A woollen stuff.

TAMING. n. f. The stopple of the mouth of a great gun.

To TAMPER. v. a. [of uncertain derivation, derived by Skinner from tempero, Latin.]

T A N

1. To be busy with physick.

'Tis in vain
To temper with your crazy brain.
Without tramping of your skull
As often as the moon's at full.

He tried waxes to bring him to a better complexion, but there was no good to be done; the very tampering cast him into a disease. L'Estrange.

2. To meddle; to have to do without fitness or necessity.

That key of knowledge, which should give us entrance into the recesses of religion, is by so much tampering and wrenching made useless.

'Tis dangerous tampering with a muse,
The profits small, and you have much to lose;
For though true wit adorns your birth or place,
Degenrate lines degrade the attained race.
Decay of Piety.

Earl Waltheof being overtaken with wine, engaged in a conspiracy; but, repeating next morning, repaired to the king, and discovered the whole matter: notwithstanding which he was beheaded upon the defeat of the conspiracy, for having but thus far tampered in it. Addison.

3. To deal; to practise secretly.

Others tamper'd
For Fleetwood, Desborough, and Lambert.

To TAN. v. a. [tannen, Dutch; tanner,
French.]

1. To impregnate or imbue with bark.

A human skull covered with the skin, having been buried in some limy soil, was tann'd or turned into a kind of leather.

Black cattle produce tallow, hides, and beef;
but the greatest part of the hides are exported raw for want of bark to tan them.

They sell us their bark at a good price for tanning our hides into leather. Swift.

2. To imbrown by the sun.

His face all tan'd with scorching sunny ray,
As he had travell'd many a summer's day
Through boiling sands of Araby and Ind. Spenser.

Like sun-parch'd quarters on the city gate,
Such is thy tan'd skin's lamecutable state. Donne.

A brown for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tan'd. Cleveland.

TANE for taken, ta'en. Ill spelt.

Two trophies tane from th' east and western shore,
And both those nations twice triumph'd o'er.
May.

TANG. n. f. [tanghe, Dutch, acrid.]

1. A strong taste; a taste left in the mouth.

Sin taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills it also searsons: so that although the body of the liquor should be poured out again, yet still it leaves that tang behind it. South.

It is strange that the soul should never once re-cal over any of its pure native thoughts, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never bring into the waking man's view any other ideas but what have a tang of the cask, and derive their original from that union. Locke.

2. Relish; taste. A low word.

There was not the least tang of religion, which is indeed the worst affectation in any thing he said or did. Atterbury.

3. Something that leaves a sting or pain behind it.

She had a tongue with a tang,
Would cry to a sailor, Go hang. Shakespeare.

4. Sound; tone: this is mistaken for tone or twang.

There is a pretty affection in the Allemain, which gives their speech a different tang from ours. Holder.

To TANG. v. n. [This is, I think, mistaken for twang.] To ring with.

Be opposite with a kinsman, furly with thy servants; let thy tongue tang arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity. Shakespeare.

TANGENT. n. f. [tangent, French; tangens, Latin.]

Tangent, in trigonometry, is a right line perpendicularly raised on the extremity of a radius, and which touches a circle in as not to cut it; but yet intersects another line without the circle called a secant, that is drawn from the centre, and which cuts the arc to which it is a tangent. Travers.

Nothing in this hypothesis can retain the planets in their orbs, but they would immediately desert them and the neighbourhood of the sun, and vanish away in tangents to their several circles into the mundane space. Bentley.

TANGIBILITY. n. f. [from tangible.]

The quality of being perceived by the touch.

TANGIBLE. adj. [from tango, Lat.] Perceptible by the touch.

Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the comfort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.

By the touch, the tangible qualities of bodies are discerned, as hard, soft, smooth. Locke.

To TANGLE. v. a. [See ENTANGLE.]

1. To implicate; to knit together.

2. To ensnare; to entrap.

She means to tangle mine eyes too,
'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye balls, nor your cheek of cream,
Shakespeare.

I do, quoth he, perceive
My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen.
Shakespeare.

You must lay lime to tangle her desires
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
Shall be full fraught with servicable vows.
Shakespeare.

If thou retire, the dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the squares of war to tangle thee.
Shakespeare.

Now 'y'th victorious
Among thy slain self-kill'd,
Not willingly, but tangled in the fold
Of dire necessity. Milton.

Skil'd to retire, and in retiring draw Hearts after them, tangled in amorous nets.
Milton.

With subtle cobweb cheats,
They're catch'd in knotted law-like nets;
In which when once they are entangled,
The more they strive, the more they're tangled.
Hudibras.

3. To embroil; to embarrass.

When my simple weakness strays,
Tangled in torrid ways,
He, my shepherd! is my guide,
He's before me, on my side. Crahan.

To TANGLE. v. n. To be entangled.

Shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd
All path of man or beast. Anon.

TANGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A knot of things interwoven in one another, or different parts of the same thing perplexed.

In tangles, and made intricate seem straight,
To mischief swift. Milton.

Sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Neera's hair. Milton.

TANIST. n. f. [an Irish word; an tanisther, Erse.]

Presently after the death of any of their captains, they assemble themselves to chuse another in his stead, and nominate commonly the next brother; and then next to him do they chuse next of the blood to be tanist, who shall next succeed him in the said captaincy. Spenser.

TANISTRY. n. f. [from tanist.]

The Irish hold their lands by tanistry, which is no more than a personal estate for his life-time that is tanist, by reason he is admitted thereunto by election. Spenser.

If the Irish be not permitted to purchase estates of freeholds, which might descend to their children, must they not continue their custom of tanis-try? which makes all their possessions uncertain.
Davies.

TAP

By the Irish custom of tansistry, the chieftains of every country, and the chief of every sept, had no longer estate than for life in their chieftaincies; and when their chieftaincy was dead, their sons, or next heirs, did not succeed them, but their tansists, who were elective, and purchased their elections by strong hand.

TANK. n. f. [tanque, Fr.] A large cistern or basin.

Handle your prining knife with dexterity: go tightly to your business: you have cost too much, and must earn it: here's plentiful provision, rascal; fullading in the garden, and water in the tank; and in holy days, the lishing of a platter of rice when you deserve it.

TANKARD. n. f. [tankard, Fr. tankaerd, Dutch; tancard, Irish.] A large vessel with a cover, for strong drink.

endure this weather?

To TATTLE. v. n. [tateren, Dutch.] To prate; to talk idly; to use many words with little meaning.

He stands on terms of honourable mind,
N. will be carried with every common wind of court's inconstant mutability,
N. after every tattling fable fly.

The one is too like an image, and says nothing, and the other too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattling.

Examine it by the tattling quality of age, which is always narrative.

The world is large enough to tattle of them.

The French language is extremely proper to tattle; it is made up of too much reputation and compliment.

TATTLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Prate; idle chat; trifling talk.

They ask'd her, how the lik'd the play?
Then told the tattle of the day.

Such tattle often entertains
My lord and me as far as Staines.

TAUTOLOGY. n. f. [ταυτολογία; tauto
and logos; tautologie, Fr.] Repetition of the same words, or of the same sense in different words.

All science is not tautology; the last ages have shown us, what antiquity never saw, in a dream.

Saint Andrew's feet ne'er kept more equal time,
Not ev'n the feet of thy own Psyche's rhyme;
I though they in numbers as in sense excel,
So just, so like tautology, they tell.

Every paper addressed to our beautiful incu-daries hath been filled with different considerations, that enemies may not see use in tautology.

To TAW. v. a. [tawen, Dutch; tapian,

Above your own Numidia's tax tons?

TAX. n. f. [tax, Welsh; taxe, Fr. taxe,
Dutch.]

1. An impost; a tribute imposed; an excise; a tallage.

He, says Horace, being the son of a tax gatherer, or collector, smells every where of the meanness of his birth. Dryden

With wars and taxes others waste their own,
And hounds burn, and household gods deface,
To drink in bowls with glittering gems enshad.

The tax upon tillage was two shillings in the pound in arable land, and four in plantations: this tax was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decuma, or tithes.

2. [taxo, Lat.] Charge; censure.

He could not without grief of heart, and without some tax upon himself and his ministers for the not executing the laws, look upon the bold licence of some pamphlets.

To TAX. v. a. [taxer, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To load with imposts.

Jehoukim gave the silver and gold to Pharaoh,
but he taxed the land to give the money.

2. [taxo, Lat.] To charge; to censure; to accuse. It has of or with, and sometimes for, before the fault imputed, and is used both of persons and things.

How many hath he kill'd? I promised to eat all of his killing — Niceto, you tax fighter Peneluck too much; but he'll be meet with you.

I am not justly to be taxed with any presumption for meddling with matters wherein I have no design.

Tax not divine disposal; wisest men
Have err'd, and by bad women been deceiv'd.

They cannot tax others omissions towards them, without a tacit reproach of their own.

Decay of Pity.

He taxed not Homer nor Virgil for interlarding their gods in the wars of Troy and Italy; neither would he have taxed Milton for his choice of a supernatural argument.

Men's virtues I have commanded as freely as I have taxed their crimes.

He call'd him back aloud, and tax'd his fear;
And sure enough he heard, but durst not hear.

Take some rich and mighty murderer,
Too great for prison, which he breaks with gold,

TEA

Who frothes for new mischief does appear,
And dares the world to tax him with the old.

Dryden.

If this be chance, it is extraordinary; and I dare not call it more, for fear of being taxed with superstition. Dryden

If he taxes both of long delay,
My guilt is less, who sooner came away. Dryden.

This salutation cannot be taxed with flattery, since it was directed to a prince, of whom it had been happy for Rome if he had never been born, or if he had never died. Addison.

TAXABLE, adj. [from tax.] That may be taxed.

TAXATION, n. f. [taxation, Fr. taxatio,
- Lat. from tax.]

1. The act of loading with taxes; impost; tax.

The subjects could taste no sweeter fruits of having a king, than grievous taxations to some vain purposes; laws made rather to find faults than to prevent faults. Sedley.

I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage; my words are as full of peace as matter. Shak.

He daily such taxations did exact,

As were against the order of the state. Daniel.

Various news I heard,
Of old mismanagements, taxations new;
All neither wholly false nor wholly true. Pope.

2. Accusation; scandal.

My father's love is enough to honour; speak no more of him, you'll be whipt for taxation one of these days. Shakspere.

TAXER, n. f. [from tax.] He who taxes.

These rumours begot scandal against the king,
taxing him for a great taxer of his people. Bacon.

TEA, n. f. [a word, I suppose, Chinese;
thé, Fr.] A Chinese plant, of which the infusion has lately been much drunk in Europe.

Addison.

He swept down a dozen tea dishes.

Spectator.

Nor will you encourage the common tea table talk. Spectator.

Green leaves of tea contain a narcotic juice, which exudes by roasting: this is performed with great care before it is exposed to sale. Arbuthnot.

A living tea pot stands; one arm held out,
One bent; the handle this, and that the spout.

Pope.

The mistress of the tea shop may give half an ounce.

Swift.

The fear of being thought pedants hath taken many young divines off from their severer studies, which they have exchanged for plays, in order to qualify them for tea tables. Swift.

When you sweep, never stay to pick up tea spoons. Swift.

TEACH, v. a. pret. and part. pass. taught, sometimes teached, which is now obsolete. [teacum Sax.]

1. To instruct; to inform, as a master: correlative to learn.

I am too sudden bold:
To teach a teacher all beneath me. Shakspere.

The Lord will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. Isaiah.

They teach all nations what of him they learn'd.

Milton.

2. To deliver any doctrine or art, or words to be learned.

Moses wrote this song and taught it.

Deuteronomy.

the commandments of men.

Matthew.

Teach us by what means to shun
Th' incontinent senses. Milton.

3. To show; to exhibit so as to impress upon the mind.

TEA

He is a good divine that follows his own instructions; I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than to be one of the twenty to follow my own teaching. Shakspere.

If some men teach wicked things, it must be that others should practise them. South.

4. To tell; to give intelligence.

Huswives are tached, instead of a clocke,
How winter night passeth by crowing of cocke. Tuff.

TO TEACH, v. n. To perform the office of an instructor.

I have labour'd,
And with no little study, that my teaching,
And the strong course of my authority,

Might go one way. Shakspere.

The heads judge for reward, the priests teach for hire, and the prophets divine for money. Micah.

TEACHABLE, adj. [from teach.] Docile; susceptive of instruction.

'Tis sufficient that matters of faith and religion be propounded in such a way, as to render them highly credible, so as an honest and teachable man may willingly and safely assent to them, and according to the rules of prudence be justified in so doing. Watkins.

We ought to bring our minds free, unbiassed, and teachable, to learn our religion from the word of God. Watts.

TEACHABLENESS, n. f. [from teachable.]
Docility; willingness to learn; capacity to learn.

TEACHER, n. f. [from teach.]

1. One who teaches; an instructor; a preceptor.

Nature is no sufficient teacher what we should do that may attain unto life everlasting. Hooker.

I went into the temple, there to hear
The teachers of our law, and to propose
What might improve my knowledge or their own. Milton.

These were notions born with us; such as was were taught without the help of a teacher. South.

Imperious, with a teacher's air,
Boastful he claims a right to wildom's chair. Blackm.

2. One who without regular ordination assumes the ministry.

Dissenting teachers are under no incapacity of accepting civil and military employment. Swift.

3. A preacher; one who is to deliver doctrine to the people.

For the choice of a governor more sufficient, the teachers in all the churches assembled themselves.

Raleigh.

Our lecture men, and some others, whom precise people stile powerful teachers, do seldom honour it.

Wolves shall succeed for teachers. White.

He may teach his doctrine who ceases to be able to preach to it. he may do it by appointing teachers, and by a vigilant exacting from them the instruction of their flocks. South.

TEAD, or TEDI, n. f. [teda, Latin.] A torch; a flambeau. Not in use.

A bushy tead, a groom did light,
And sacred lamp in secret chamber hide. Spenser.

themselves; amongst the first fort we reckon the dip-chick, coots, teal, wiggon. Carew.

TEAM, n. f. [temo, the team of a carriage,
Lat. tyne, Sax. a yoke.]

1. A number of horses or oxen drawing at once the same carriage.

There a ploughman; all unwitting found,
As he his toilsome team that way did guide,
And brought thee up in ploughman's state to bide.

Spenser.

TEA

We fairies that do run
By the triple Hecate's team,

From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,

Now are frolick. Shakspere.

Making such diff'rence betwixt wake and sleep
As is the diff'rence betwixt day and night,

The hour before the heavenly harpers' team
Begins his golden progress in the east. Shakspere.

I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me, nor who 'tis I love. Shakspere.

After the declining sun
Had chang'd the shadows, and their task was done,
Homes with their weary team they took their way.

He heav'd with more than human force to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team. Dryden.

In stiff clays they may plow one acre of wheat with a team of horse. Mortimer.

2. Any number passing in a line.

Lake a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings and cleave the liquid sky.

Dryden.

TEAR, n. f. [ea in this word is pronounced ce; tean, Saxon; tuare, Danish; tear rhymes to cheer.]

1. The water which violent passion forces from the eyes.

She comes; and I'll prepare
My tear-stain'd eyes to sue her musics.

Shakspere.

The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me,
Knowing that thou wouldst have me drown'd there.

With tears as salt as sea, through thy unkindness
Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear.

In all my miseries; but thou hast forced me.
Let's dry our eyes. Shakspere.

Tears are the effects of compression of the me-ture of the brain upon dilatation of the spirit.

She silently a gentle tear let fall.

2. Any moisture trickling in drops.

Let Araby extol her happy coast,
Her fragrant flows, her trees with precious tears,
Her second harvests. De.

TO TEAR, v. a. pret. tore, anciently tan part. pass. tornd. [teapan, Saxon; tear Swedish: ea is pronounced as a; tear rhymes to square.]

1. To pull in pieces; to lacerate; to re-to separate by violent pulling.

Come, feeling night!
And with thy bloody and invisible hand
Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond
Which keeps me pale.

The one went out from me; and I find, now
he is torn in pieces, and I saw him not since.

John tore off lord Strutt's servants clothes, tear
and then they came home naked.

Ambassadors sent to Carthage were like to tear to pieces by the populace. Blount.

2. To laniate; to wound with any thin point drawn along.

Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair,
The women beat their breasts, their cheeks th tear. Shakspere.

Neither shall men tear themselves for their mourning, to comfort them for the dead. Jerem.

3. To break, or take away by violence.

As storms the flues, and torrents tear the ground
Thus rag'd the prince, and scatter'd death about.

4. To divide violently; to shatter.

Is it not as much reason to say, that God de-fatherly authority, when he fathers one in pos-sion of it to have his government tear in pe-ces and shared by his subjects? Locke.

5. To pull with violence; to drive violently.

He roar'd, he beat his breast, he tore his hair

From harden'd oak, or from a rock's cold wall
At least thou art from some tear tygress come;

Dryden.

TEA

On rough seas from their foundation torn.
Go by the winds, and in a tempest born. Dryden.
Blush rather, that you are a slave to passion,
Which, like a whirlwind, tears up all your virtues,
And gives you not the leisure to consider. A. Philips.

To take away by sudden violence.
Solyman
Rhodes and Buda from the christians tore. Waller.

The hand of fate
Has torn thee from me, and I must forget thee. Addison.

To make a violent rent.
In the midst a tearing groan did break
The name of Antony. Shakspeare.
To TEAR. v. n. [tieren, Dutch.] To tune; to rave; to rant turbulently.
All men transported into outrages for small trivial matters, fall under the incendo of this bull, tation tearing mad for the pinching of a moule. L'Estrange.

TEAR. n. f. [from the verb.] A rent; a fissure.

TEARER. n. f. [from to tear.] He who rends or tears; one who blusters.

TEARFALLING. adj. [tear and fall.]

I am in
So far in blood, that sin will pluck on sin:
Tearful pity dwells not in this eye. Shakspeare.

TEARFUL. adj. [tear and full.] Weeping; full of tears.
Let meet that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,
With tearful eyes add water to the sea? Shakspeare.

This clears the cloudy front of wrinkled care,
And drives the tearful fumes of despair:
Calm'd with that virtuous draught, th' exalted mood

All tale of woe delivers to the wind.
To TEASE. v. a. [teyan, Sax.]
1. To comb or unravel wool or flax.
2. To scratch cloth in order to level the nap.

3. To torment with importunity; to vex with assiduous importunence.

But indefatigable teasing. Butler.
My friends always tease me about him, because he has no estate. Spectator.

After having been present in public debates, he was teased by his mother to inform her of what had passed. Addison.

We system-makers can sustain
The thesis, which you grant was plain;
And with remarks and comments tease ye,
In case the thing before was easy. Prior.

TEASE. n. f. [tearl, Sax. disficus, Lat.]
A plant.

The species are three: one is called cardus fulleum, and, of singular use in raising the nap upon woollen cloth. Milton.

TEASER. n. f. [from tease.] Any thing that torments by incessant importunity.

A fly buzzing at his ear, makes him deal to the best advantage. If you would have him come to himself, you must take off his little teaser, which holds his reason at bay. Collier.

TEAT. n. f. [teth, Welsh; tit, Saxon; tette, Dutch; teton, French.] The dug of a beast; anciently the pap of a woman.

Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny. Shakspeare.
Sows cattle a fruitful year, watering the earth better than rain; for the earth sucks it as out of the teat. Bacon.

When we perceive that bats have teats, we infer,
that they suckle their younglings with milk. Brown.
It more pleases my sense,
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of one or goat dropping with milk at even. Milton.

TED

Infants sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat. Locke.

The goat, how bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthea, teach'd her teat dulcet
With milk, thy early food. Prior.

TE'CHILY. adv. [from techy.] Peevishly;
fretfully; frowardly.

TE'CHINESS. n. f. [from techy.] Peevishness; fretfulness.

TE'CHNICAL. adj. [τεχνικός; technique, Fr.] Belonging to arts; not in common or popular use.

In technical words, or terms of art, they refrain not from calling the same fulsome sometimes the sulphur, and sometimes the mercury, of a body
Locke.

TECHY. adj. Peevish; fretful; irritable;
easily made angry; froward.

I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar,
And he is as techy to be wold to wooe,
As he is stubborn-chaste against all fute. Shakspeare.

When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple, and felt it bitter, pretty fool, to see it techy, and fall out with the dug! Shakspeare.

TECTO'NICK. adj. [τεκτονικός.] Pertaining to building.

To TED. v. a. [teaban, Saxon, to prepare.] To lay grafs newly mown in rows.

The smell of grain, or tedded grafs, or kine,
Or dany, each rural sight, each rural sound. Milton.
Hay-makers following the mowers, and casting it abroad, they call tedding. Mortimer.

Prudent has tall'n heaps Collecting, cheerd with the tepid wreaths
Of tedded grafs, and the sun's mellowing beams, Rivall'd with artful heats. Philips.

TE'DDER, or TETHER. n. f. [tudder, Dut.
tindt, a rope, Islandick.]

1. A rope with which a horse is tied in the field that he may not pasture too wide.

Tougher, Erse.

2. Any thing by which one is restrained.

We lived joyfully, going abroad within our tedder. Bacon.
We shall have them against the wall; we know the length of their tedder; they cannot run far from us. Child.

TE DEUM. n. f. A hymn of the church, so called from the first two words of the Latin.

The choir
With all the choicest musick of the kingdom, Together sung to Deum Shakspeare.

tory. Bacon.

TE'DIOUS. adj. [tedieux, French; tedium,
Latin.]

1. Wearisome by continuance; troublesome; irksome.

The one intense, the other still renits,
Cannot well suit with either, but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton.

Pity only on fresh objects stays,
But with the tedious sight of woes decays. Dryden.

2. Wearisome by prolixity. Used of authors or performances.

They unto whom we shall seem tedious are in nowise injured by us, because it is in their own hands to spare that labour which they are not willing to endure. Hooker.

That I be not further tedious unto thee, hear us of thy clemency a few words. Acts.
Chief in story to dissect
With long and tedious havoc fabled knights. Milton.

3. Slow.

But then the road was smooth and fair to see,
With such insensible declivity,
That what men thought a tedious course to run,
Was finish'd in the hour it first begun. Herne

TE'DIOUSLY. adv. [from tedious.] In such a manner as to weary.

TEE

TE'DIOUSNESS. n. f. [from tedious.]

1. Wearisomeness by continuance.

She dislates them all within a while;
And in the sweetest finds a tedious fuge. Davies.

2. Wearisomeness by prolixity.

In vain we labour to persuade them, that any thing can take away the tediousness of prayer, except it be brought to the same measure and form which themselves assign. Hooker.

3. Prolixity; length.

Since brevity's the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief. Shakspeare.

4. Uneasiness; tincomeness; quality of wearying.

In those very actions whereby we are especially perfected in this life, we are not able to persist; forced we are with very weariness, and that often,
to interrupt them, which tediousness cannot fall into those operations that are in the state of bliss
when our union with God is complete. Hooker.

More than kisses, letters mingle souls,
For thus friends absent speak: this ease controul's
The tediousness of my life. Davies.

To TEEM. v. n. [team, Saxon, offspring.]

1. To bring young.

If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live
And be a thwart distemper'd torment to her. Shakspeare.

2. To be pregnant; to engender young.

Have we more sons! or are we like to have?
Is not my teeming date drunk up with time,
And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age? Shakspeare.

When the rising spring adorns the mead,
Teeming buds and cheerful greens appear. Dryden.

There are fundamental truths, the basis upon which a great many others rest: these are teeming truths, rich in store, with which they furnish the mind, and, like the lights of heaven, give light and evidence to other things. Locke.

3. To be full; to be charged as a breeding animal.

We live in a nation where there is scarce a single head that does not teem with politics. Addison.

To TEEM. v. a.

1. To bring forth; to produce.

What's the newest grief?
Each minute teems a new one. Shakspeare.
Common mother, thou Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breest, Teems and feeds all. Shakspeare.

The earth obey'd; and fruit
Op'ning her fertile womb, teem'd at a birth Immense living creatures. Milton.

The deluge wrought such a change, that the earth did not then teem forth its increase, as formerly, of its own accord, but required culture. Woodward.

2. To pour. A low word, imagined by Skinner to come from townmen, Danish, to draw out; to pour. The Scots retain it: as, teem that water out; hence Sage took this word.

Teem out the remainder of the ale into the tankard, and fill the glass with small beer. Sage.

TEEMER. n. f. [from teem.] One that brings young.

TEEMFUL. adj. [teampul, Saxon.]

1. Pregnant; prolific.

2. Brimful.

That bare head knight for dread and doleful teen
Would have fled, he durst approach no ear. Spenser.

Fry not in heartless grief and doleful teen. Spenser.

TEL

My heart bleeds
To think o' th' scene that I have turn'd you to.
Shakespeare.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.
Shakespeare.

To TEEN. v. a. [from teinan, to kindle, Saxon.] To excite; to provoke to do a thing. Not in use.

TEENS. n. f. [from teen for ten.] The years reckoned by the termination teen; as, thirteen, fourteen. Spenser.

Our author would excuse these youthful scenes,
Begotten at his entrance in his teens;
Some childish fancies may approve the toy,
Some like the mule the more for being a boy.
Granville.

TEETH. The plural of tooth.
Who can open the doors of his face? his teeth are terrible round about. Job.

To TEETH. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed teeth; to be at the time of dentition.

When the symptoms of teething appear, the gums ought to be relaxed by softening ointment. Arbuth.

To see them take your deposition. Hudibros.

TEIL tree. n. f. [tilia, Latin.] The flume with linden or lime tree.

A teitree and an oak have their substance in them when they cast their leaves. Junah.

TEINT. n. f. [teinte, French.] Colour; touch of the pencil.

Glazed colours have a vivacity which can never be imitated by the most brilliant colours, because the different teints are simply laid on, each in its place, one after another. Dryden.

TELARY. adj. [tela, a web, Latin.] Spinning webs.

The pictures of telary spiders, and their position in the web, is commonly made lateral, and regarding the horizon; although we shall commonly find it downward, and their heads respecting the center. Brown.

TELESCOPE. n. f. [telescope, Fr. teles and scopio.] A long glass by which distant objects are viewed.

The telescope discovers to us distant wonders in the heavens, and shews the milky way, and the bright cloudy spots, in a very dark sky, to be a collection of little stars. Watts.

TELESCOPICAL. adj. [from telescope.] Belonging to a telescope; seeing at a distance.

To TELL. v. a. pret. and part. pass. told. tellan, Saxon; tellen, tellen, Dutch; talen, Danish.]

1. To utter; to express; to speak.
I will not eat till I have told mine errand. Genesis.

Thy message might in telling wound,
And in performing end us. Milton.

2. To relate; to rehearse.
I will declare what wife men have told from their fathers, and have not hid. Job.

When Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and the interpretation, he worshipped. Judges.

He longer will delay to hear thee tell His generation. Milton.

You must know; but break, O break my heart,
Before I tell my fatal story out,
Th' usurper of my throne is my wife! Dryden.
The rest are vanish'd, none repaid the gate,
And not a man appears to tell their fate. Pope.

3. To teach; to inform.
He gently ask'd, where all the people be,
Which in that stately building went to dwell,
Who answer'd him full soft, he could not tell. Spenser.

I told him of myself; which was as much
As to have ask'd him pardon. Shakespeare.

Tell me now, what lady is the same,
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promis'd to tell me of? Shakespeare.
The fourth part of a shewel of silver will I give to the man of God to tell us our way. 1 Samuel.
Saint Paul telleth us, we must needs be subject not only for fear, but also for conscience sake. Bishop Sanderson.

Tell me how may I know him, how adore.
Milton.

4. To discover; to betray.
They will tell it to the inhabitants. Numbers.

5. To count; to number.
Here lies the learned Savile's heir,
So early wife, and lasting fair,
That none, except her years they told,
Thought her a child, or thought her old. Waller.
Numerous fails the fearful only tell;
Courage from hearts, and not from numbers, grows. Dryden.

A child can tell twenty before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.
She doubts if two and two make four,
Though he has told them ten times o'er. Prior.

6. To make excuses. A low word.
Tush, never tell me; I take it much unkindly,
That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse
As if the strings were thine, shouldst know of this. Shakespeare.

To TELL. v. n.

1. To give an account; to make report.
I will compass thine altar, O Lord, that I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works. Psalms.
Ye that live and move, fair creatures! tell,
Tell, if ye saw, how came I thus, how here? Milton.

2. To TELL on. To inform of. A doubtful phrase.
David saved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, saying, Left they should tell on us, saying, So did David. 1 Samuel.

TELLER. n. f. [from tell.]

1. One who tells or relates.

2. One who numbers; a numberer.

3. A teller is an officer of the exchequer, of which there are four in number: their business is to receive all monies due to the king, and give the clerk of the pell a bill to charge him therewith; they also pay all persons any money payable to them by the king, by warrant from the auditor of the receipt: they also make books of receipts and payments, which they deliver to the lord treasurer. Cowell.

TELLTALE. n. f. [tell and tale.] One who gives malicious information; one who carries officious intelligence.

You speak to Calcas, and to such a man
That is no fearing telltale. Shakespeare.

What, shall these papers lie like telltals here?
Shakespeare.

Let not the heavens hear these telltale women Rail on the Lord's mounted. Shakespeare.

'Tis done: report displays her telltale wings,
And to each ear the news and tidings brings. Fairfax.

And to the telltale sun descry
Our conceal'd solemnity. Milton.

TEL

TEM

Eurydice and he are prisoners here,
But will not long be so: this telltale ghost
Perhaps will clear them both. Dryden and Lee.
A telltale out of school
Is of all wits the greatest fool. Swift.

TEMERARIOUS. adj. [temerarius, French; temerarius, Latin.]

1. Rash; heady; unreasonably adventurous; unreasonably contemptuous of danger.

Resolution without foresight is but a temerarious folly; and the consequences of things are the point to be taken into consideration. L'Estrange.

2. Careless; heedless; done at random.
Should he find upon one single sheet of parchment an oration written full of profound sense, adorned with elegant phrase, the wit of man could not persuade him that this was done by the temerarious dushes of an unguided pen. Re.

TEMERITY. n. f. [temeritas, Latin] Rashness; unreasonably contempt of danger.

The figures are bold even to temerity. Cowley.

To TEMPER. v. a. [tempero, Latin; temperer, French.]

Thy subsistence serving to the appetite of a eater, tempered itself to every man's liking. Watts.

6. To bring to due proportion; to moderate excess.

These soft fires with kindly heat
Of various influence foment and warm, Temper or nourish. Milton.

7. To soften; to mollify; to allay; to soothe; to calm.

Solon, in his laws to the Athenians, laboured temper their warlike courage with sweet delights of learning and sciences; so that as much as they excelled in arms, the other exceeded in knowledge. Speke.

With this she wons to temper angry Jove,
When all the Gods he threats with thundering. Speke.

Now will I to that old Andronicus,
And temper him with all the art I have. Shakespeare.

Woman! Nature made thee
To temper man: we had been brutes without you. Shakespeare.

8. To form metals to a proper degree of hardness.

The sword
Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was given him temper'd so, that neither keen Nor solid might resist that edge. Milton.

In the tempering of steel, holding it but a minute or two longer or lesser is the other competitor.

heat, gives it very different tempers, as to brittleness or toughness. Eagle.

Repeated poals they heat,
And in a heav'n serene, resplendent arms appear:
Redding the skies, and glittering all around,
The temper'd metals clash, and yield a silver sound.
Dryden.

9. To govern. A latinism.
With which the damned ghosts he governeth,
And furies rules, and Tartare tempereth.
Spenser.

TEMPER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Due mixture of contrary qualities.
Nothing better proveth the excellency of this soil and temper, than the abundant growing of the pines trees. Raleigh.
Health itself is but a kind of temper, gotten and perfected by a convenient mixture of contraries.
Arbutnot.

2. Middle course; mean or medium.
If the estates of some bishops were exorbitant before the reformation, the present clergy's wishes reach no further than that some reasonable temper had been used instead of pushing them so quick.
Swift.

3. Constitution of body.
This body would be increased daily, being supplied from above and below; and having done growing, it would become more dry by degrees, and of a temper of greater consistency and firmness. Burnet.

4. Disposition of mind.
Thus, I shall call it evangelical, temper is far from being natural to any corrupt child of Adam.
Hammond.

Remember with what mild
And gracious temper he both heard and judg'd,
Without wrath or reviling.
This will keep their thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations. Locke.

All irregular tempers in trade and business are but like irregular tempers in eating and drinking.
Law.

5. Constitutional frame of mind.
The brain may devise laws for the blood, but a hot temper leaps o'er a cold decree. Shakespeare.

Our hearts,
Of brothers temper, do receive you in
With all kind love. Shakespeare.

6. Calmness of mind; moderation.
Rebore yourselves unto your tempers, fathers,
And without perturbation here me speak.
Ben Jonson.

Teach me, like thee, in various nature wild,
To fall with dignity, with temper rule. Pope.

7. State to which metals are reduced, particularly as to hardness.
Here draw I
A sword, whose temper I intend to stain
With the best blood that I can meet withal.
Shakespeare.

Ithuriel with his spear
Touch'd lightly; for no falsehood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Offence to its own likeness: up he starts, Discover'd, and surpris'd. Milton.

These needles should have a due temper; for, if they are too soft, the force exerted to carry them through the flesh will bend them; if they are too bottle, they snap. Sharp.

TEMPERAMENT. n. f. [temperamentum,
Latin; temperament, French.]

1. Constitution; state with respect to the predominance of any quality.
Bodies are denominated hot and cold, in proportion to the present temperament of that part of our body to which they are applied. Locke.

2. Medium; due mixture of opposites.
The common law has wasted and wrought out those differences, and reduced the kingdom to its just state and temperament. Hale.

TEMPERAMENTAL, adj. [from temperament.] Constitutional.

That temperamental dignities, and conjecture of prevalent humours, that may be collected from spots in our nails, we concede. Brown.

TEMPERANCE. n. f. [temperantia, Lat.]

1. Moderation; opposed to gluttony and drunkenness.

Intellectual representations are received with as unequal a fate, upon a bare temperamental relish or disgust. Glanville.

TEMPERANCE. n. f. [temperantia, Lat.]

1. Moderation; opposed to gluttony and drunkenness.

Observe
The rule of not too much; by temperance taught In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, not gluttonous delight. Milton.

Temperance, that virtue without pride, and fortune without envy, gives indolence of body and tranquillity of mind; the best guardian of youth and support of old age. Temple.

Make temperance thy companion; so shall health
Sit on thy brow. Doddles.

2. Patience; calmness; sedateness; moderation of passion.
His senseless speech and doted ignorance
When as the noble prince had marked well,
He calm'd his wrath with goodly temperance. Spenser.

What, are you chaf'd?
Ask God for temperance, that's th' appliance only
Which your disease requires. Shakespeare.

TEMPERATE. adj. [temperatus, Latin.]

1. Not excessive; moderate in degree of any quality.
Use a temperate heat, for they are ever temperate heats that digest and mature; wherein we mean temperate, according to the nature of the subject;
for that may be temperate to fruits and liquors which will not work at all upon metals. Bacon.

His sleep
Was airy, light, from pure digestion bred,
And temperate vapours bland. Milton.

2. Moderate in meat and drink.
I advised him to be temperate in eating and drinking. Weyman.

3. Free from ardent passion.
So hot a speed with such advice dispos'd,
Such temperate order in to fence a course,
Doth want example. Shakespeare.

She's not forward, but modest as the dove;
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn.
Shakespeare.

From temperate inactivity we are unready to put in execution the suggestions of reason. Brown.

TEMPERATELY. adv. [from temperate.]

By winds that temperately blow,
The bark should pass secure and slow. Addison.

2. Calmly; without violence of passion.
Temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakespeare.

3. Without gluttony or luxury.
God esteems it a part of his service if we eat or drink; so it be temperately, and as may best preserve health. Taylor.

TEMPERATENESS. n. f. [from temperate.]

1. Freedom from excesses; mediocrity.
Langley's mild temperateness
Did tend unto a calmer quietness. Daniel.

TEMPERATURE. n. f. [temperatura, tempero, Latin; temperature, French.]

1. Constitution of nature; degree of any qualities.
It lieth in the same climate, and is of no other temperature than Guinea. Abbot.

Birds that change countries at certain seasons, if they come earlier, shew the temperature of weather. Bacon.

There may be as much difference as to the temperature of the air, and as to heat and cold, in one mile, as in ten degrees of latitude; and he that would cool and refresh himself in the summer, had better go up to the top of the next hill, than remove into a far more northern country. Brown.

Memory depends upon the consistence and the temperature of the brain. Watts.

2. Mediocrity; due balance of contrarie-ties.

As the world's sun doth effects beget
Diff'rent in divers places every day;
Here Autumn's temperature, there summer's heat,
Here flow'ry spring-tide, and there winter gray. Davies.

If, instead of this variation of heat, we suppose an equality or constant temperature of it before the deluge, the case would be much altered. Woodward.

3. Moderation; freedom from predominant passion.
In that proud part, which her to goodly graceeth,
Most goodly temperature you may desire. Spenser.

TEMPERED. adj. [from temper.] Disposed with regard to the passions.
When was my lord to much ungently temper'd,
To stop his ears against admittance? Shakespeare.

TEMPEST. n. f. [tempeste, French; tempestas, Latin.]

1. The utmost violence of the wind; the names by which the wind is called according to the gradual increase of its force seem to be, a breeze; a gale; a gust; a storm; a tempest.

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks. Shakespeare.
Some have been driven by tempest to the south. Abbot.

What at first was call'd a gust, the same Hath now a storm's, anon a tempest's name. Donne.

We, caught in a fiery tempest, shall be hurl'd
Each on his rock transfix'd. Milton.

With clouds and storms
Around thee thrown, tempest o'er tempest roll'd, Thou humblest nature with thy northern blast. Thomson.

2. Any tumult; commotion; perturbation.
The tempest in my mind
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Save what beats there. Shakespeare.

TO TEMPEST. v. a. [from the noun.] To disturb as by a tempest.
Part huge of bulk,
Wallowing unwicely, enormous in their gale,
Tempest the ocean. Milton.

TEMPEST-BEATEN. adj. [tempest and beat.] Shattered with storms.
In the calm harbour of her gentle breast,
My tempest-beaten soul may safely rest. Dryden.

Since their disposi- tion, the constitutions of countries admit not such tempering of harvest. Frown.

TEMPESTUOUS. adj. [temp. fluens, Fr.
from tempest.] Stormy; turbulent.
Tempestuous fortune hath spent all her might,
And thrilling sorrow thrown his utmost dart. Spenser.

Which of them rising with the sun, or falling,
Should prove tempestuous. Milton.

Her looks grow black as a tempestuous wind,
Some raging thoughts are rowling in her mind. Dryden.

Pompey, when dissuaded from embarking because the weather was tempestuous, replied, My voyage is necessary, my life is not so. Collier.

TEMPLAR. n. f. [from the Temple, a house near the Thames, anciently belonging to the knights templars, originally from the temple of Jerusalem.] A student in the law.

Wis and temples ev'ry sentence raise,
And wonder with a foolish face of praise. Pope.

TEMPLE. n. f. [temple, French; templum,
Latin.]

1. A place appropriated to acts of religion.

T E M

The household gods
Throng our large temples with the shows of peace.
Shakespeare.

Here we have no temple but the wood, no altar feebly but hornbeasts.
Shakespeare.
Most sacrilegious murder hath broke open
The lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life of the building.
Shakespeare

2. [tempora, Latin.] The upper part of the sides of the head where the pulse is felt.

Her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece. Shaksp.
We may apply intercrepents of malice upon the temples; frontals also may be applied. Wylman.
To procure sleep, he uses the scratching of the temples and ears; that even mollities wild benefits.
Arbutnot

The weapon enter'd close above his ear,
Cold through his temples glides the whining spear.
Pope.

TEMPLET. n. f. A piece of timber in a building.

When you lay any timber on brick-work, as linteols over windows, or templets under girders, lay them in loam. Moxon.

TEMPORAL. adj. [temporal, Fr. temporalis, low Latin.]

1. Measured by time; not eternal.
As there they sustain temporal life, so here they would learn to make provision for eternal. Hooker.

2. Secular; not ecclesiastical.
This scripture shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread of kings. Shakespeare.
All the temporal lands, which men devout
By testament hath given to the church,
Would they strip from us. Shakespeare.
All temporal power hath been wrested from the clergy, and much of their ecclesiastick. Suyt.

3. Not spiritual.
There is scarce any of those decisions but gives good light, by way of authority or reason, to some questions that arise also between temporal dignities, especially to cases wherein some of our subordinate temporal titles have part in the controversy. Selden.
Call not every temporal end a degrading of the intention, but only when it contradicts the ends of God, or when it is principally intended: for sometimes a temporal end is part of our duty; and such are all the actions of our calling. Taylor.
Prayer is the instrument of fetching down all good things to us, whether spiritual or temporal.
Duty of Man.

Our petitions to God, with regard to temporals, must be that medium of convenience proportioned to the several conditions of life. Rogers.

4. [temporal, French.] Placed at the temples, or upper part of the sides of the head.

Copious bleedings, by opening the temporal arteries, are the most effectual remedies for a phrenzy. Arbutnot.

TEMPORALITY. } n. f. [temporalité, TEMPORALS. } French; from tempo- poral.] Secular possessions; not ecclesiastick rights.

Such revenues, lands, and tenements, as bishops have had annexed to their sees by the kings and others from time to time, as they are barons and lords of the parliament. Cowell.

The residue of these ordinary finances is casual,
as the temporalities of vacant bishopricks, the profits that grow by the tenures of lands. Bacon.

The king yielded up the point, reserving the ceremony of homage from the bishops, in respect of the temporalities, to himself. Ayliffe.

TEMPORALLY. adv. [from temporal.]

With respect to this life.

Sinners who are in such a temporally happy condition, owe it not to their sins, but wholly to their luck. South.

TEMPORALTY. n. f. [from temporal.]

1. The laity; secular people.

T E M

The pope sucked out inestimable sums of money, to the intolerable grievance of clergy and temporality. Abbot.

2. Secular possessions.
TEMPORANEITY. adj. [temporis, Latin.] Temporary.

TEMPORARINESS. n. f. [from temporary.]
The state of being temporary; not perpetuity.

TEMPORARY. adj. [tempus, Latin.] Lasting only for a limited time.

These temporary truces were soon made and soon broken; he desired a truce amity. Bacon.

If the Lord's immediate speaking, uttering, and writing, doth conclude by a necessary inference, that all precepts uttered and written in this manner are simply and perpetually moral; then, on the contrary, all precepts wanting this are merely temporary. White.

The republick, threatened with danger, appointed a temporary dictator, who, when the danger was over, retired again into the community. Addison.

TO TEMPORIZE. v. n. [temporiser, Fr.
tempus, Latin.]

1. To delay; to procrastinate.
If Cupid hath not spent all his quiver in Venice,
thou wilt quake for this shortly.
—I look for an earthquake too then.
—Well, you will temporize with the hours.
Shakespeare.

The earl of Lincoln, deceived of the country's concourse, in which case he would have tempo-rized, resolved to give the king battle. Bacon.

2. To comply with the times, or occasions.
They might their grievance inwardly complain,
But outwardly they needs must temporize. Daniel.

3. To comply. This is improper.
The dauphin is too wilful opposite,
And will not temporize with my entreaties:
He flatteringly says, he'll not lay down his arms. Shak.

TEMPORIZER. n. f. [temporiseur, French;
from temporizer.] One that complies with times or occasions; a trimmer.

I pronounce thee a hovering temporizer, that cast with thine eyes at once see good and evil, Inclining to them both. Shakespeare.

TO TEMPT. v. a. [tento, Latin; tenter,
French.]

1. To solicit to ill; to incite by presenting some pleasure or advantage to the mind;
to entice.

'Tis not the king that sends you to the Tower:
My lady Gray tempts him to this harsh extremity.
Shakespeare.

You, ever gentle gods! take my breath from me;
Let not my woe for spirit tempt me again!
To die before you please. Shakespeare.
Come together, that Satan tempt you not.
1 Corinthians.

He that hath not wholly subdued himself, is quickly tempted and overcome in small things.

Fix'd on the fruit she gaz'd, which to behold Might tempt alone. Milton.

The devil can but tempt and deceive; and if he cannot destroy so, his power is at an end. South.
O wretched maid!

Whose roving fancy would resolve the same
With him who next should tempt her easy flame.
Prior.

2. To provoke.
I'm much too vent'rous
In tempting of your patience. Shakespeare.

Your talons from the wretched and the bold;
Tempt not the brave and needy to despair:
For, though your violence should leave 'em bare
Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain. Dryden.

3. It is sometimes used without any notion of evil; to solicit; to draw.

But his strength conceal'd
Which tempted our attempt, and wrought our fall.
Milton.

T E N

The rowing crew
To tempt a surge, clothe all their tilts in blue. Gay.
4. To try; to attempt; to venture on. I know not whether it was not originally l'attempt, which was vitiously written to tempt, by an elision of the wrong syllable.

This from the vulgar branches must be torn,
And to fair Proserpine the present born,
Ere leave be giv'n to tempt the nether flow.
Dryden.

TEMPTABLE. adj. [from tempt.] Liable to temptation; obnoxious to bad influence. Not elegant, nor used.

If the parliament were as temptable as any other assembly, the managers must fail for want of tools to work with. Swift.

TEMPTATION. n. f. [tentation, French;
from tempt.]

1. The act of tempting; solicitation to ill;
entecement.

All temptation to transgresses repel. Milton.

2. The state of being tempted.

When by human weakness, and the arts of the tempter, you are led into temptations, prayer is the thread to bring you out of this labyrinth. Duppa.

3. That which is offered to the mind as a motive to ill.

Set a deep glass of rhenish wine on the contrary casket; for if the devil be within, and that temptation without, he will chide it. Shakespeare.

Dare to be great without a guilty crown,
View it, and lay the bright temptation down
'Tis late to seize on all. Dryden.

TEMPTER. n. f. [from tempt.]

1. One who solicits to ill; an enticer.
These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues. Shakespeare.

Is this her fault or mine?
The tempter or the tempted, who sins most?
Not he; nor doth the tempt. Shakespeare.

Those who are bent to do wickedly, will never want tempters to urge them on. Tillotson.
My work is done:

She's now the tempter to ensnare his heart. Dryden.

2. The infernal solicitor to evil.
The experience of our own frailties, and the watchfulness of the tempter, discourage us. Hammond.

Foretold what would come to pass,
When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell.
Milton.

To this high mountain's top the tempter brought Our Saviour. Milton.

TENSE BREAD. } n. f. [temsen, Dutch,
TENSED BREAD. } tamijer, French;
tamefare, Italian, to sift; tema, Dutch;
tamis, French; tamiso, Italian, a sieve.] Bread made of flower better sifted than common.

Inebriation; intoxication by liquor.

TEMULENT. adj. [temulentus, Latin.] Inebriated; intoxicated as with strong liquors.

TEN. adj. [tyn, Saxon; tien, Dutch.]

1. The decimal number; twice five; the number by which we multiply numbers into new denominations.

Thou shalt have more Than two tens to a score. Shakespeare.

Ten hath been extolled as containing even, odd, long, and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers; and Aristotle observed, that barbarians as well as Greeks used a numeration unto ten. Brown.

With twice ten sail I cross'd the Phrygian sea, Scarce seven within your harbour meet. Dryden.

From the soft lyre,
Sweet flute, and ten-string'd instrument, require Sounds of delight. Prior.

2. Ten is a proverbial number.

There's a proud modesty in mortals,
Averse from begging; and resolv'd to pay
Ten times the gift it asks. Dryden.

Although English is too little cultivated, yet the faults are mine in ten owing to neglectation. Swift.

TENABLE. adj. [tenable, French.] Such as may be maintained against opposition;
such as may be held against attacks.

The town was strong of itself, and wanted no industry to fortify and make it tenable. Boacon.

Sir William Ogle seized upon the castle, and put it into a tenable condition. Cicendous.

Infidelity has been driven out of all its outworks: the atheist has not found his post tenable, and is therefore retired into deism. Spectator.

TENACIOUS. adj. [tenax, Latin.]

1. Grasping hard; inclined to hold fast; not willing to let go: with of before the thing held.

A tenacious adherence to well-chosen principles, makes the face of a governor shine in the eyes of those that see his actions. South.

Grasping, and full tenacious of thy hold, Would'st thou the Grecian chiefs, though largely soul'd,

Should give the prizes they had gain'd? Dryden.

You reign absolute over the hearts of a stubborn and stubborn people, tenacious to madness of their liberty. Dryden.

True love's a miser; so tenacious grown,
He weighs to the least gram of what's his own.

Men are tenacious of the opinions that first possess them. Locke.

He is tenacious of his own property, and ready to invade that of others. Arbuthnot.

2. Retentive.

The memory in some is very tenacious; but yet
there seems to be a constant decay of all our ideas, even of those which are struck deepest, and in minds the most retentive. Locke.

3. [tenace, French.] Having parts disposed to adhere to each other; cohesive; vis-cous; glutinous.

Three equal round vessels filled, the one with water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors stirred alike to give them a vortical motion; the pitch by its tenacity will lose its motion quickly, the oil being less tenacious will keep it longer, and the water being less tenacious will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time. Newton.

4. Niggardly; close-fisted; meanly parsimonious. Ainsworth.

TENACIOUSLY. adv. [from tenacious.]

With disposition to hold fast.
Some things our juvenile reason tenaciously adhere to, which yet our maturer judgments disallow of. Clarendon.

TENACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from tenacious.]

Unwillingness to quit, resign, or let go.

TENACITY. n. f. [tenacité, French; tenacitas, tenax, Latin.] Viscosity; glutin-ousness; adhesion of one part to another.

If many contiguous vortices of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fixed stars, yet these and all their parts would, by their tenacity and stiffness, communicate their motion to one another till they all rested among themselves. Newton.

Substances, whose tenacity exceeds the powers of digestion, will neither pass, nor be converted into slime. Arbuthnot.

TENANCY. n. f. [tenanche, old French; tenentia, law Latin, from tenant.] Temporary possession of what belongs to another.

Milton.

TENDENCY. n. f. [from tend.]

1. Direction of course toward any place or object.

It is not much business that distracts any man;
but the want of purity, continuity, and tendency towards God. Taylor.

Writings of this kind, if conducted with candour, have a more particular tendency to the good of their country, than any other compositions. Adison.

We may acquaint ourselves with the powers and properties, the tendency and inclinations, of body and spirit. Harris.

All of them are good, and most of them had a moral tendency, to bat in the violence of parties, or laugh out of countenance some vice or folly.
Swift.

2. Direction or course toward any inference or result, &c.

The greater congruity or incongruity there is in any thing to the reason of mankind, and the greater tendency it hath to promote or hinder the perfection of man's nature, so much greater degrees hath it of moral good or evil; to which we ought to proportion our inclination, or aversion.
Wilkins.

These opinions are of so little moment, that, like motes in the sun, their tendencies are little noticed. Locke.

1. Earthly; not celestial.

Far passing the height of such terrestrial,
Like an huge giant of the Titan race. Spenser.

Terrrestrial heav'n! danc'd round by other heav'ns
That shine, yet bear their bright officious lamps, Light above light. Milton.

Thou brought'st Briareus with his hundred hands,
So call'd in heav'n; but mortal men below
By his terrestrial name Ægeon know. Dryden.

2. Consisting of earth; terreous.

I did not confine these observations to land, or terrestrial parts of the globe, but extended them to the fluids. Woodward.

TO TERRSTRIVY. v. a. [terrestris and facio, Lat.] To reduce to the state of earth.

Though we should affirm, that heaven were but earth celestified, and earth but heaven terrestified; or, that each part above had an influence on its divided affinity below; yet to single out these relations is a work to be effected by revelation. Brown.

TERRRESTRIOUS. adj. [terrestris, Lat. terrefre, Fr.] Terreous; earthy; consisting of earth.

This variation proceedeth from terrestrious eminences of earth respecting the needle. Brown.

TERRIBLE. adj. [terrible, Fr. from terribilis, Lat.]

1. Dreadful; formidable; causing fear.

TER

Was this a face to be expos'd
In the most terrible and numbing stroke
Of quick, cold lightning? Shakespeare.

Fit love for gods,
Not terrible, though terror be in love. Milton.

Thy native Latium was thy darling care,
Prudent in peace, and terrible in war. Prior.

2. Great, so as to offend: a colloquial hyperbole.

Being indisposed by the terrible coldness of the season, he reposed himself till the weather should mend. Clarendon.

Hast strangely flood the test. Shakespeare.

Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp'd upon it. Shakespeare.

They who thought worst of the Scots, did not think there would be no fruit or discovery from that test. Clarendon.

What use of oaths, of promise, or of test,
Where men regard no God but interest? Waller.

Thy virtue, pounce, has flood the test of fortune
Like purest gold, that, tortur'd in the furnace, Comes out more bright, and brings forth all its weight. Addison.

3. Means of trial.

Whom should my muse then fly to, but the best
Of kings for grace; of poets, for my test? Ben Jonson.

To be read herself the need not fear;
Each test, and every light, her muse will bear. Dryden.

Your noble race
We banish not, but they forsake the place:
Our doors are open: True; but, ere they come,
You toil your censur'd test, and tune the room. Dryden.

4. That with which any thing is compared in order to prove its genuineness.

Unerring Nature, still divinely bright,
One clear, unchang'd and universal light,
Lose, force, and beauty, must to all impart.
At once the source, and end, and test of art. Pope.

5. Discriminative characteristic.

Our penal laws no sons of yours admit,
Our test excludes your tribe from benefit. Dryden.

TETE A TETE, n. f. [Fr.] Check by jowl.

Long before the squire and dame
Are tete à tete. Prior.

Deluded mortals, whom the great
Chafe for companions tete à tete;
Who at their dinners, en famille,
Get leave to sit when'er you will. Swift.

TETHER, n. f. [See TEDDER.] A string by which horses are held from pasturing too wide.

Hamlet is young,
And with a larger tether he may walk
Than may be given you. Shakespeare.

Fame and censure with a tether,
By fate, are always link'd together. Swift.
Imagination has no limits; but where it is confined, we find the shortness of our tether. Swift.

TO TETHER, v. a. [from the noun.] To tie up.

TETRAGONAL, adj. [τετραγωνος.] Four square.

From the beginning of the disease; reckoning on unto the twentieth day, the moon will be in a tetragonal or quadrat aspect, that is, four signs removed from that wherein the disease began; in the fourteenth day it will be in an opposite aspect, and at the end of the third septenary tetragonal again. Brown.

TETRAPETALOUS, adj. [τετραπέταλος and petalos.] Such flowers as consist of four leaves round the style: plants having a tetrapetalous flower constitute a distinct kind. Miller.

All the tetrapetalous filiquose plants are alkaline. Arbutnot.

TETRARCH, n. f. [tetrarcha, Lat. tetrarque, It. τετράρχης.] A Roman governor of the fourth part of a province.

All the earth,
Kings and tetrarchs, are their tributaries:
People and nations pay them hourly stipends. Ben Jonson.

TETRASTICK, n. f. [τετράστιχος.] An epigram or stanza of four verses.

VOL. II.

The tetrestick obliged Spenser to extend his sense to the length of four lines, which would have been more closely confined in the couplet. Pope.

TETRICAL, } adj. [tetricus, Lat. tetricus, TETRICOUS, } French.] Froward; perverse; sour.

In this the tetrical bass finding him to excel, gave him as a rare gift to Solyman. Knolles.

TETTER, n. f. [teteren, Saxon.] A scab; a scurf; a ringworm.

A moist inflant tetter bark'd about,
Most lazar like, with vile and loathsome crust,
All my smooth body. Shakespeare.

A scabby tetter on their pelts will sicken Dryden.

Tew, n. f. [towe, a hempen rope, Dutch.]

1. Materials for any thing. Skinner.
2. An iron chain. Ainsworth.

To Tew, v. a. [tapien, Saxon.] To work; to beat so as to soften: of leather we say to taw.

Tewet, n. f. [tuyau or tuyal, Fr.]
In the back of the forge, against the fire-place, is fixed a thick iron plate, and a taper pipe in it about five inches long, called a tewet, or tewel iron, which comes through the back of the forge; in this tewet is placed the bellows. Mozon.

To Tewet, v. a. [formed from tew by reduplication.] To beat; to break.

The method and way of watering, piling, breaking, and *tewet*ing of hemp and flax, is a particular business. Mortimer.

TEXT, n. f. [texte, Fr. textus, Lat.]

1. That on which a comment is written.

We expect your next
Should be no comment, but a text,
To tell how modern beasts are text. Walter.

2. A sentence of scripture.

In religion
What erron, but some sober brow
Will bless it, and approve it with a text? Shakespeare.

Some prime articles of faith are not delivered in a literal or catechetical form of speech, but are collected and concluded by argumentation out of sentences of scripture, and by comparing of sundry texts with one another. White.

His mind he should fortify with some few texts, which are home and apposite to his case. South.

TEXTILE, adj. [textilis, Latin.] Woven; capable of being woven.

The placing of the tangible parts in length or transverse, as in the warp and woof of textiles. Bacon.

The materials of them were not from any herb, as other textiles, but from a stone called amiantus. Wilkins.

TEXTMAN, n. f. [text and man.] A man ready in quotation of texts.

Men's daily occasions require the doing of a thousand things, which it would puzzle the best textman readily to bethink himself of a sentence in the bible, clear enough to satisfy a scrupulous conscience of the lawfulness of it. Sanderfon.

TEXTINE, adj. [textina, Lat.] Relating to weaving.

It is a wonderful artifice, how newly-hatched maggots, not the parent animal, because the emits no web, nor hath any textine art, can convolve the stubborn leaf, and bind it with the thread it weaves from its body. Derham.

TEXTUABIST, } n. f. [textuaire, Fr. from TEXTUARY, } text.] One ready in the text of scripture; a divine well versed in scripture.

TEXTUARY, adj. [from text.]

1. Containing in the text.
He extends the exclusion unto twenty days, which in the textuary sense is fully accomplished in one. Brown.

2. Serving as a text; authoritative.

I see no ground why his reason should be textuary to ours, or that God wended him an universal headship. Glauville.

TEXTURE, n. f. [textus, Latin.]

1. The act of weaving.

Skins, although a natural habit unto all before the invention of texture, were something more unto Adam. Brown.

2. A web; a thing woven.

Others, far in the grassy dale,
Their humble texture weave. Thomson.

3. Manner of weaving with respect either to form or matter.

Under state of richest texture spread.
A veil of richest texture wrought the wears. Pope.

4. Disposition of the parts of bodies; combination of parts.

Sparks -
Not in their liquid texture mortal wound Receive, no more than can the fluid air. Milton.

While the particles continue entire, they may compose bodies of the same nature and texture now, with water and earth composed of entire particles in the beginning. Newton.

THAN, adv. [thane, Saxon.] A particle placed in comparison after the comparative adjective or adverb, noting a less degree of the quality compared in the word that follows than: as, Monarchy is better than anarchy. The hawk flies more swiftly than the pigeon.

Were we not better to fall once with virtue,
Than draw a wretched and dishonour'd breath? Ben Jonson.

More true delight in that small ground,
Than in possessing all the earth was found. Daniel.

I never met with a more unhappy conjuncture of affairs, than in the business of that unfortunate earl. King Charles.

I love you for nothing more than for the just esteem you have for all the sons of Adam. Swift.

THANE, n. f. [thane, Saxon.] An old title of honour, perhaps equivalent to baron.

By Smell's death I know I'm thane of Glamis;
But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives. Shakespeare.

TO THANK, v. a. [thancian, Sax. thanken, Dutch; thanken, German.]

1. To return acknowledgments for any favour or kindness.

The forlorn soldier, that so nobly fought,
He would have well become this place, and grac'd
The thankings of a king. Shakespeare.

For your stubborn answer
The king shall know it, and, no doubt, thank you. Shakespeare.

We thank God always for you. 2 Thessalonians.

He was so true a father of his country,
To thank me for defending ev'n his foes,
Because they were his subjects. Dryden.

2. It is used often in a contrary or ironical sense.

Ill fate our ancestor impure
For this we may thank Adam. Milton.

Weigh the danger with the doubtful bliss,
And thank yourself, if ought should tall amiss. Dryden.

That Portugal hath yet no more than a suspension of arms, they may thank themselves, because they came so late into the treaty; and, that they came so late, they may thank the whigs, whose false representations they believed. Swift.

THANK, } n. f. [thancan, Saxon; thanche,
THANKS, } Dutch.] Acknowledgment paid for favour or kindness; expression of gratitude. Thanks is commonly used of verbal acknowledgment, gratitude of real repayment. It is seldom used in the singular.

The poorest service is repaid with thanks. Shakespeare.

Happy be Theſeus, our renowned duke.
—Thanks, good Egeus, what's the news?

The ſoul ſaith, I have no thank for all my good deed; and they that eat my bread ſpeak evil of me.

He took bread, and gave thanks to God in preſence of them all.

Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory

Some embrace ſuits which never mean to deal effectually in them; but they will win a thank, or take a reward.

For this to th' infinitely good we owe

THANKFUL. adj. [Thankful, Saxon.] Full of gratitude; ready to acknowledge good received.

A thankful remembrance of his death.

Be thankful unto him, and bleſs his name.

In favour, to uſe men with much difference is good; for it maketh the perſons preferred more thankful, and the reſt more officious.

Live, thou great encourager of arts;

THANKFULLY. adv. [from thankful.]

With lively and grateful ſenſe of good received.

Here is better than the open air; take it thankful.

If you have liv'd, take thankful the paſt;

Make, as you can, the ſweet remembrance laſt.

Out of gold, how to draw as many diſtinct tub-ſtances as I can ſeparate from vitriol, I ſhall very thankful learn.

THANKFULNESS. n. f. [from thankful.]

Gratitude; lively ſenſe or ready acknowledgment of good received.

No ſcarceſly would give me thanks for what I had done, for fear that thankfulneſs might have an introduction of reward.

Will you give me this maid your daughter?

—As freely, ſon, as God did give her me.

—Sweet prince, you learn me noble thankfulneſs.

The celebration of theſe holy myſteries being ended, retire with all thankfulneſs of heart for having been admitted to that heavenly feaſt.

Thankfulneſs and ſubmiſſion make us happy.

THANKLESS. adj. [from thank.]

1. Unthankful; ungrateful; making no acknowledgment.

Let ſo great good as he for her had wrought,

Should the unknown, and buried be in thankleſs thought.

How ſharper than a ſerpent's tooth it is,

To have a thankleſs child.

One grateful woman to thy ſame ſupply'd

What a whole thankleſs land to his deny'd.

2. Not deſerving, or not likely to gain thanks.

The contracting and extending the lines and ſenſe of others, if the firſt authors might ſpeak for themſelves, would appear a thankleſs office.

And bring home on thy breaſt more thankleſs fears.

THANKLESSNESS. n. f. [from thankleſs.]

Ingratitude; failure to acknowledge good received.

Not I have written then, ſeems little leſs

THANKOFFERING. n. f. [thank and offering.]

Offering paid in acknowledgment of mercy.

A thouſand thankofferings are due to that providence which has delivered our nation from theſe ſhroud iniquities.

THANKSGIVING. n. f. [thanks and give.]

Celebration of mercy.

Theſe ſacred hymns chriſtianity hath peculiar to itſelf, the other being ſongs too of praife and thankſgiving, wherewith as we ſerve God, ſo the Jews likewiſe.

Of old there were ſongs of praife and thankſgiving unto God.

We ſhould acknowledge our obligations to God for the many favours we receive, by continual praifes and thankſgiving.

The common practice of all chriſtian churches and ſtates, in appointing and keeping days of public thankſgiving and humiliation, is argument ſufficient to prove, that in the common ſenſe of chriſtians it is not forbidden in ſcripture.

THANKWORTHY. adj. [thank and worthy.]

Deſerving gratitude; meritorious.

This is thankworthy, if a man endure grief.

If love be compell'd, and cannot chuſe,

How can it grateful or thankworthy prove?

THARM. n. f. [Tharm, Sax. darm, Dut. the gut.] Intestines twisted for feveral uſes.

THAT. pronoun. [that, Gothick; Sax. dat, Dutch.]

1. Not this, but the other.

He wins more than that means I told you.

Octavia, not only that,

That were exorable, that and thouſands more

Of ſemblable import, but he hath wag'd

New wars againſt thee.

2. Which; relating to an antecedent thing.

The inner makes an aberration from the ſcope or mark that is ſet before him.

You'll rue the time

That clogs me with this anſwer.

Nothing they but duſt can throw,

Or bones that haſten to be fo.

When there is no ſuch evident certainty as to take away all kind of doubting, in ſuch caſes, a judgment that is equal and impartial muſt incline to the greater probability.

3. Who; relating to an antecedent perſon.

Saints that taught and led the way to heaven.

4. It ſometimes ſerves to ſave the repetition of a word or words foregoing.

I'll know your buſineſs, that I will.

They ſaid, What is that to us? ſee thou to that.

Ye deſraud, and that your brethren.

Yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies I will not caſt them away.

We muſt direct our prayers to right ends; and that either in reſpect of the prayer itſelf, or the things we pray for.

They weep, as if they meant

That way at leaſt proud Nabus to prevent.

This ſunick ſubject will occur upon that of poetry.

What is inviting in this ſort of poetry, proceeds not ſo much from the idea of a country life itſelf, as from that of its tranquillity.

5. Oppoſed to this, as the other to one.

This is not fair; nor profitable that;

Nor t' other queſtion proper for debate.

6. When this and that relate to foregoing words, this is referred like hic or ecce to the latter, and that like ille or cetera to the former.

In this ſcale gold, in t' other ſame does lie,

The weight of that mounts this too high.

7. Such as.

By religion is meant a living up to thoſe principles, that is, to act conformably to our beſt reaſon, and to live as becomes thoſe who believe a God and a future ſtate.

8. That which; what.

See, I think the meat wants that I have.

9. The thing.

The ſhew-bread hath rowed, beſides that that has hand ſheweth.

He made that art which was a rage.

10. The thing which then was.

Secure proud Nabus ſlept,

And dreamt, vain man, of that day's barbarous ſport.

11. By way of eminence.

This is that Jonathan, the joy and grace,

That Jonathan, in whom does that remain

All that fond mothers wiſh.

Hence love himſelf, that tyrant of my days

12. In THAT. Because; in conſequence of.

Things are preached not in that they are taught, but in that they are publiſhed.

THAT. conjunction.

1. Because.

It is not that I love you leſs

Than when beſore your feet I lay;

But to prevent the ſad increaſe

Of hopeleſs love, I keep away.

Forgive me that I thus your patience wrong.

2. Noting a conſequence.

That he ſhould dare to do me this diſgrace!

Is fool or coward writ upon my face?

The cuſtom and familiarity of theſe tongues do ſometimes ſo far influence the expreſſions in theſe epistles, that one may obſerve the force of the Hebrew conjugations.

3. Noting indication.

We answered, that we held it ſo agreeable, as we both forgot dangers paſt, and fears to come, that we thought an hour ſpent with him was worth years of our former life.

In the midſt of this darkneſs they ſaw ſo much light, as to believe that when they died they would immediately to the ſtars.

I have ſhewed before, that a mere poſſibility to the contrary can by no means hinder a thing from being highly credible.

4. Noting a final end.

Treat it kindly, that it may

With at leaſt with us to ſtay.

THATCH. n. f. [Thace, Sax. straw, Skinner, from Thac, a roof; in Iſlandick, that, Mr. Lye.]

Straw laid upon the top of a houſe to keep out the weather.

Hard by a ſtyle, beneath a root of thatch

Dwelt Obloquy, who in her early days

Baskets of fiſh at Billington did watch,

Cod, whiting, oſter, mackerel, ſprat, or plaice.

A plough-boy, who has never ſeen any thing but thatched houſes, naturally imagines that thatch belongs to the very nature of a houſe.

Then came roſy health from her cottage of thatch,

Where never phyſician had liſted the latch.

To THATCH. v. a. [Thaccian, Saxon.] To cover as with ſtraw.

Make falſe hair, and thatch

Your poor thin roofs with burthens of the dead.

Moss groweth chiefly upon ridges of houſes tiled or thatched.

Then Rome was poor, and there you might behold

The palace thatch'd with ſtraw.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloë

Might riſe a houſe above two ſtories:

A lynck ode would ſtate, a catch

Would tile, an epigram would thatch.

THATCHER. n. f. [from thatch.] One whole trade is to cover houſes with ſtraw.

You merit new employments daily;

Our thatcher, diſcher, gard'ner, bailey,

Ad is univerſal timber; it ſerves the ſoldier ſeaman, carpenter, thatcher, and huſbandman.

To THAW. v. n. [Thapan, Saxon; degen Dutch.]

1. To grow liquid after congelation; to melt.

When thy melted maid
Faster at thy pillow hath laid;
If thou begin'st to show for shame,
May my name sleep in.
It on firm land
Flaw not, but gather heap, and ruin seems
Of ancient pile; all else deep snow and ice.

Having let that ice thaw of itself, and frozen the liquor a second time, we could not discern any thing.

O Solitude! romantic maid,
Whether by nodding tow'rs you tread,
Or climb the Andes' cliffed side,
Or by the Nile's coy source abide,
Or, starting from a half year's sleep,
From Hecla view the thawing deep,
Or Tadmor's marble wastes survey,
Or in yon roofless cloister play;
There, fond nymph! again I woo,
And again thy steps pursue.

To remit the cold which had caused troth.

To THAW. v. a. To melt what was con-gealed.

Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phœbus' fire scarce thaws the icicles.

Think not that Cæsar bears such rebel blood,
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With that which melteth fools.

My love is thaw'd,
Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a foe,
Bears no impression of the thing it was.

She can unlock
The clasping charin, and thaw the numbing spell.

Burnish'd steel, that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air.

Her icy heart is thaw'd.

THAW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Liquefaction of any thing congealed.
A man of my kidney, that aims subject to heat
as better; a man of continual dissolution and thaw.

Harden his stubborn heart, but still as ice
More harden'd after thaw.

2. Warmth such as quiesces congelation.
I was the prince's foster, and duller than a great thaw.

That cold country where discourse doth freeze in the air all winter, and may be heard in the next summer, or at a great thaw.

When sharp frosts had long constrain'd the earth,
A kindly thaw unlocks it with cold rain,
And the tender blade peeps.

THE. article. [de, Dutch.]

1. The article noting a particular thing.

Your son has paid a soldier's debt:
He only liv'd but till he was a man;
The which no fooster had his prowess confirm'd,
In the upstinking station where he fought,
But like a man he dy'd.

He put him in mind of the long pretence he had to be groom of the bed-chamber, for the which he could not chuse but say, that he had the queen's promiss.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell.

I'll march the muses, Hannibal.

The fair example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark;
Above the stars let thy bold music sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world.

Night shades the groves, and all in silence lie,
All but the mournful Philomel and I.

2. Before a vowel e is commonly cut off in verse.

Who had th' especial engines been to rear
His fortices up into the gates they were.

Th' adorning thee with so much art
Is but a barb'rous skill:
'Tis like the poisoning of a dart,
Too apt before to kill.

3. Sometimes he is cut off.
In this scale gold, in t' other same does lie.

4. It is used by way of consequential reference.

The longer sin hath kept possession of the heart,
the harder it will be to drive it out.

5. In the following passage the is used according to the French idiom.

As all the considerable governments among the Alps are commonwealths, so it is a constitution the most adapted of any to the poverty of these countries.

THEATRICAL. adj. [theatral, Fr. theatralis,
Lat.] Belonging to a theatre.

THEATRE. n. f. [theatre, Fr. theatrum,
Latin.]

1. A place in which shows are exhibited;
a playhouse.

This safe and universal theatre
Present more woful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play.

When the boats came within fifty yards of the pillar, they found themselves surrounded, yet so as they might go about, to as they all stood as in a theatre beholding this light.

2. A place rising by steps or gradations like a theatre.

Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of steepest view

In the midst of this fair valley flow'd
A native theatre, which, rising slow,
By just degrees o'erlook'd the ground below.

No theatres of oaks around him rise,

Whose roots earth's centre touch, whose heads the skies.

THEATRICAL. } adj. [theatrum, Latin.]

THEATRICK. } Seemick; suiting a theatre; pertaining to a theatre.

Theatrical forms stickle hard for the prize of religion: a distorted countenance is made the mark of an upright heart.

London's vain church with old theatrick date,
Turn area of triumph to a garden gate.

THEATRICKALLY. adv. [from theatrical.]

In a manner suiting the stage.

Dumplings her look, her gesture proud,
Her voice theatrically loud.

THEE. The oblique singular of thou.

Poet and saint, to thee alone were giv'n

The two most sacred names of earth and heav'n.

THEFT. n. f. [from thief.]

1. The act of stealing.

Thet is an unlawful felonious taking away of another man's goods against the owner's knowledge or will.

His thefts were too open; his fleching was like an unkill'd finger, he kept not time

Their nurse Euripile,

Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children.

Deceit in trade, a secret theft. extortion, an un-pudent theft.

The thefts upon the publick can be looked into and punished.

2. The thing stolen.

If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether ox, ass, or sheep, he shall restore double

THEIR. pronoun. [heora, of them, Sax.]

1. Of them: the pronoun possessive, from they.

The round world should have shook Lions into civil streets, and citizens into their dens.

For the Italians, Dante had begun to file their language in verse before Boccaccio, who likewise received no little help from his waiter Petrusch; but the reformation of their prose was wholly owing to Boccaccio

2. Theirs is used when any thing comes in construction between the possessive and substantive.

Prayer we always have in our power to bestow,
and they never in theirs to refuse.

They gave the same names to their own idols which the Egyptians did to theirs.

The penalty to thy transgression due,
And due to theirs, which out of thine will grow.

Nothing but the name of zeal appears

'Tis not our best actions and the world of theirs.

Yam are our neighbours hopes, and van their chances.

The fault is more their language's than theirs.

Which established law of theirs seems too strict at first, because it excludes all secret intrigues.

And, reading, with like theirs out fate and shame

THEM. The oblique of they.

The materials of them were not from any herb.

THEME. n. f. [theme, Fr. from Thema.]

1. A subject on which one speaks or writes.
Every object of our ideas is called a theme, whether it be a being or not being.

Two truths are told,

As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial theme.

When a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off.

O! could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as it is my theme:

Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;

Strong without rage, without o'erflowing fall.

Whatever near Eurota's happy stream,
With laurels crown'd, had been Apollo's theme.

Though I her's streams immortal Rome behold,
Though foaming Herminus swells with tides of gold;
From heav'n's it still though seven-fold Nilus flows,
And harvests on a hundred realms bestows;
Thee now no more shall be the muse's theme,
Lo! many names, as in the sea their streams.

2. A short dissertation written by boys on any topic.

Putting the empty wits of children to compose themes, verses, and orations.

3. The original word whence others are derived.

I eticholans duly reduce the words to their original or theme, to the first rate of nouns, or first terms of verbs.

THESE/LS. n. f. [See THEY and SELF.]

1. These very persons: in this sense it is nominative.

Whatever evil befall them in that, themselves have made themselves worthy to suffer it.

2. The oblique case of they and themselves.

They open to themselves at length the way.

Such things as in themselves are equally true and certain, may not yet be capable of the same kind or degree of evidence as to us.

Waken children, cut of sleep with a low call, and give them kind usage till they come perfectly to themselves.

THESE. adv. [than, Gothic; than, Saxon; dan, Dutch.]

1. At that time.

The then bishop of London, Dr. Laud, attended on his journey throughout that whole journey.

Then, then a boy, within my arms I laid.

2. Afterward; immediately afterward;
soon afterward.

If an herb be cut off from the roots in winter,
and then the earth be trodden down hard, the roots will become very hard in summer. Bacon.

3. In that case; in consequence.

If God's immediate speaking and writing argueth precepts, thus spoken or written, to be perpetually moral; then his writing of precepts argueth them to be temporary. White.

Had not men been fated to be blind,
Then had our lances pierc'd the treach'rous wood. Dryden.

Had fate so pleas'd I had been eldest born,
And then without a crime the crown had worn. Dryden.

If all this be so, then man has a natural freedom. Locke.

4. Therefore; for this reason.

Whiles then the apostle moves us to unity, and moves us also to an endeavour to it, he bestows upon us as well a discovery, as an exhortation, showing us not only the end, but also the means. Holyday.

If then his providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good Milton.

Now then be all thy weighty cares away,
Thy jealousies and fears; and, while you may,
To peace and rest repose give all the day. Dryden.

5. At another time: as now and then, at one time and other.

Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars. Milton.

One while the matter is not aware of what is done, and then in other cases it may fall out to be his own act. L'Estrange.

6. That time: it has here the effect of a noun.

Till then who knew
The force of those dire arms? Milton.

THENCE, adv. [contracted, according to Minsheu, from thence.]

1. From that place.

Faith by the oracle of God; I thence Invoke thy aid. Milton.

Darkness there might well seem twilight here. Milton.

1. An exclamation, directing something at a distance.

Your fury hardens me.

A guard there; seize her.

It is used at the beginning of a sentence with the appearance of a nominative case, but serves only to throw the nominative behind the verb: as, a man came, or there came a man. It adds however some emphasis, which, like many other idioms in every language, must be learned by custom, and can hardly be explained. It cannot always be omitted without harshness: as, in old times there was a great king.

For reformation of errors there were that thought it a part of christian charity to instruct them.

There are delivered in holy scripture many weighty arguments for this doctrine.

4. [The plural of this, that, or it.] These things.

Why do you keep alone?
 Of forlorn fancies your companions making,
 Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died
 With them they think on. Shakespeare.

The flowers the more along the day,
 And ev'ry nymph and shepherd find,
 That in her hair they look'd more gay
 Than growing in their native bed. Prior.

THICKLE, n. f. A slice; a scumner; a spatula. Amisworth.

THICK, adj. [Diece, Sax. dich, Dutch; dyck, Danish; thickar, Islandick.]

1. Not thin.

2. Dense; not rare; gross; crafts.

God caused the wind to blow, to dry up the abundant fume of the earth, make the land more firm, and cleanse the air of thick vapours and unwholesome mists. Raleigh.

To warm milk pour spirit of nitre, the milk presently after will become thicker than it was. Arbutnot.

3. Not clear; not transparent; muddy; feculent.

Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks,
 And given my treasures and my rights of thee
 To thick-ey'd musing and car'd melancholy? Shakespeare.

A fermentation makes all the wine in the vessel thick or foul, but when that is past, it grows clear of itself. Temple.

Encumber'd in the mud, their oars divide,
 With heavy strokes, the thick unwieldy tide. Addison.

4. Great in circumference; not slender.

My little finger shall be thicker than his loins. 1 Kings.

Thou art waxen fat; thou art grown thick, covered with fatness. Deuteronomy.

 was three inches thick.

7. Frequent; in quick succession; with little intermission.

They charged the defendants with their small shot and Turkey arrows as thick as hail. Kneller.

Favours came thick upon him, like man showers than sprinkling drops; he was knighted, made gentleman of the king's bedchamber, and an annual pension given him. Wotton.

This being once a week, came too thick and too often about. Spelman.

His pills as thick as handgranados flew,
 And where they fell as certainly they flew. Roscom.

Not thicker billows beat the Libyan main,
 Nor thicker harvests on rich Hermsus rise,
 Than stand these troops. Dryden.

8. Close; not divided by much space; crowded.

It brought them to a hollow cave,
 Amid the thickest woods. Spenser.

The people were gathered thick together. Luke.

He fought secure of fortune as of fame;
 Still by new maps the island might be shewn:
 Conquests he strow'd where'er he came,
Thick as the galaxy with stars is sown. Dryden.

Objects of pain or pleasure do not lie thick enough together in life, to keep the soul in constant action. Addison.

9. Not easily pervious; set with things close to each other.

He through a little window cast his sight,
 Though thick of bars that gave a scanty light. Dryden.

The speedy horse
 Watch each entrance of the winding wood:
 Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood. Dryden.

Next the proud palace of Salerno stood
 A mount of rough ascent, and thick with wood. Dryden.

Bring it near some thick-headed tree. Mortimer.

10. Thick; not thin.

It called a little of the wax, which in a pomegranate, or some such thick-coated fruit, it would not become. Mortimer.

Thick-leaved woods amongst the grafts will be more drying than ordinary grafts. Mortimer.

11. Without proper intervals of articulation.

Speaking thick, which nature made his blessing, Became the accents of the valiant,
 To seem like him. Shakespeare.

THICK, n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The thickest part, or time when any thing is thickened.

Achilles having with a mine suddenly blown up a great part of the wall of the Spanish station, in the thick of the dust and smoke presently entered his men. Kneller.

2. A thicket; a place full of bushes.

Hang in the gloomy thicks, and make unstable bogs. Dryden.

3. Thick and thin. Whatever is in the way.

Through perils both of wind and limb,
 Through thick and thin she followed him Hudibras.

When first the dawn appears upon his chin,
 For a small time to swear through thick and thin. Dryden.

THICK, adv. [It is not always easy to distinguish the adverb from the adjective.]

1. Frequently; fast.

'Tis some disaster,
 Or else he would not send so thick. Denham.

I hear the trampling of thick beating feet.
 Thus way they move. Dryden.

2. Closely.

The neighbour plain with arms is cover'd o'er,
 The vale an iron harvest seems to yield,
 Of thick lying lances in

The combat thickens, like the smoke that rises
From westward when the show'ry clouds arise,
Or parting hail comes pouring on the main,
When Jupiter descends in bar'den'd rain. Addison.

THICKET. n. f. [Wicceou. Saxon.] A close knot or tuft of trees; a close wood or copse.

I drew you hither,
Into the thickest thicket of the park. Shakespeare.
Within a thicket I repos'd; and found
Let fall from heav'n a sleep interminate. Chapman.
Thus, or any of his, could not in halts creep through those desert regions, which the length of one hundred and thirty years after the flood had fortified with thickets, and permitted every bush and briar, reed and tree, to join themselves into one main body and forest. Raleigh

How often, from the sleep
Of echoing lull, or thicket, have we heard
Celestial voices, to the midnight air,
Sole, or responsive, each to other's note,
Singing their great Creator! Milton.
My brothers slept to the next thicket side
To bring me berries. Milton.

Now Leda's twins
Their trembling lances brandish'd at the foe;
Nor had they mis'd, but he to thickets fled Conceal'd from aiming spears, not p'vious to the sight. Dryden.

I've known young Juha rise before the sun,
To beat the thicket where the tyger slept,
Or seek the lion in his dreadful haunts. Addison.

THICKLY. adv. [from thick.]

1. Deeply; to a great quantity.
Mending cracked receivers, having thickly overlaid them with diachylon, we could not perceive leaks. Boyle.

2. Closely; in quick succession.

THICKNESS. n. f. [from thick.]
1. The state of being thick; density.

2. Quantity of matter interposed; space taken up by matter interposed.

In the darkened room, against the hole at which the light entered, I could easily see through the whole thickness of my hand the motions of a body placed beyond it. Boyle.

3. Quantity laid on quantity to some considerable depth.

Plant a tree, and cover it some thickness with clay
on the top, and see what it will put forth. Bacon.

4. Confistence; grossness; not rareness;
fluidity.

Nature mingled with water to the thickness of honey, and insisted on the bud after the vine is cut, it will sprout forth. Bacon.

Deities imagined to come from the thickness of clouds, come often from the contrary cause. Arbutnot.

5. Superviousness; closeness.

The banks of the river and the thickness of the shades drew into them all the birds of the country. Addison.

6. Want of sharpness; want of quickness.

A person found in himself, being at some times subject to a thickness of hearing, the like effect.

What you write is printed in large letters, otherwise, between the weakness of my eyes and thickness of hearing, I should lose the greatest pleasure. Swift.

THICK-SKULLED. adj. Dull; stupid.

They're pleas'd to hear their thick-skull'd judges cry,
Well mov'd! oh finely said! Dryden.

This downright fighting tool, this thick-skull'd hero,

Thou blunt unthinking instrument of death,
Whose plain dull virtue has outgone my wit. Dryden.

THICKSET. adj. [thick and set.] Close planted.

His eye-balls glare with fire, suffus'd with blood,
His neck shows up a thickset thorny wood;
His brawled back a trench unpal'd appears,
And hands erected like a field of spurs. Dryden.

The world is so thick with the numerous productions of the creatures, that besides the apparent beauty of things viewed by all, there are those secret graces in every part of nature, which some few alone have the skill to discern. Greco.

THICKSKIN. n. f. [thick and skin.] A coarse gross man; a numskull.

The shallow't thickskin of that barren sort,
Who Pyramus presented in their sport,
Forsook his teene, and enter'd in a brake. Shakespeare.

THIEF. n. f. [thiefs, Gothick; Deif, Saxon; dief, Dutch.] It was anciently written thief, and so appears to have been of two syllables: thie was wont to be taken for thrift; so that thie of is he that takes of or from a man his thie, that is, his thrift or means whereby he thrives.]

1. One who takes what belongs to another:
the thief steals by secrecy, and the robber
by violence; but these senses are confounded.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot
by night. Shakespeare.

This he said because he was a thief, and had the bag. John.

Can you think I owe a thief my life,
Because he took it not by lawless force?
Am I oblig'd by that villain's rapines,
And to maintain his murders. Dryden.

2. An excellence in the snuff of a candle.

Their burning lamps the storm cutting show,
Th' oil sparkles, thieves about the snuff do grow. May.

THIEF-CATCHER. n. f. [thief, and catch, lead, take.] One

THIEF-TAKER. whose business is to detect thieves, and bring them to justice.

A wolf passed by as the thief-leaders were dragging a fox to execution. L'Estrange.

My ev'nings all I would with sharpers spend,
And make the thief-catcher my bosom friend. Bramble.

TO THIEVE. v. n. [from thief.] To steal;
to practise theft.

THIEVERY. n. f. [from thieve.]

1. The practice of stealing; theft.

Ne how to scape great punishment and shame,
For their late treason and vile thievery. Spenser.

Do villainy, do, since you profess to do't,
Like workmen; I'll example you with thievery. Shakespeare.

He makes it a help unto thievery, for thieves having a design upon a house, make a fire at the four corners thereof, and cast therein the fragments of loudstone, which radeth smoke. Brown.

Amongst the Spartans, thievery was a practice morally good and honest. South.

2. That which is stolen.

Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,
Claims his rich thievery up he knows not how. Shakespeare.

THIEVISH. adj. [from thief.]

1. Given to stealing; practising theft.

What, wouldst thou have me go and beg my food,
Or with a bawle and boisterous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road? Shakespeare.

O thievish night,
Why shouldst thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
That nature hangs in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller? Milton.

The thievish God suspected him, and took
The kind aside, and thus in whisper spoke:
Discover not the theft. Addison.

2. Secret; sly; acting by stealth.

Four and twenty times the pilot's class
Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass. Shakespeare.

THIEVISHLY. adv. [from thievish.]

Like a thief.

They lay not to live by their woe,
But thievishly loiter and lurk. Tupper.

THIEVISHNESS. n. f. [from thievish.]
Disposition to steal; habit of stealing.

THIGH. n. f. [Thiep, Saxon; thieo, thand- ick; die, Dutch.]

The thigh includes all between the buttocks and the knee. The thigh bone is the longest of all the bones in the body: its fibres are close and hard: it has a cavity in its middle; it is a little convex and round on its fore-side, but a little hollow, with a long and small ridge on its back-side. Quincy.

He touched the hollow of his thigh, and it was out of joint. Geoffrey.

The flesh dissolv'd, and left the thigh bone bare. Wylmer.

THICK. pronoun. [Thic, Saxon.] That same. Obsolete.

I love thick late: alas, why do I love?
She deigns not my good will, but doth reprove.

And of my rural musick holdeth scorn. Spenser.

THILL. n. f. [Thille, Saxon, a piece of timber cut.] The shafts of a waggon;
the arms of wood between which the last horse is placed.

More easily a waggon may be drawn in rough ways, if the fore wheels were as high as the hinder wheels, and if the thills were fixed under the axis. Motimer.

THILL-HORSE. n. f. [thill and horse.]

THILLER. } The last horse; the horse that goes between the shafts.

Whole bridle and saddle, whittles and nail,
With collars and harness for thiller and all. Tupper.

What a beard hast thou got! thou hast got more hair on thy chin, than Dobbin my thill horse has on his tail. Shakespeare.

THIMBLE. n. f. [This is supposed by Mynheer to be corrupted from thumb bell.] A metal cover by which women secure their fingers from the needle when they sew.

Your ladies and pale visag'd maids,
Like Amarous, come tripping after drums;
Their thimbles into armed gauds change,
Their needles to lances. Shakespeare.

Examine Venus and the Moon,
Who stole a thimble or a spoon. Hudibras.

Venus that run perpendicular to the horizon, have valves sucking to their sides like to many thimbles, which, when the blood presses back, stop the passage, but are compressed by the forward motion of the blood. Chapin.

THIME. n. f. [thymus, Latin; thym, Fr.]
A fragrant herb from which the bees are supposed to draw honey. This should be written thyme.

Fair margerds, and bees stirring thime. Spenser.

THIN. adj. [Thin, Saxon; thunner, thannick; dunn, Dutch.]

1. Not thick.

Beat gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires. Fabius.

2. Rare; not dense.

The hope of the ungodly is like thin froth, that is blown away with the wind. Wylmer.

In the day when the air is more thin, the sound perceiveth better, but when the air is more thick, as in the night, the sound spendeth and is determin'd abroad to be. Bacon.

Understand the same
Of thin within their wat'ry residence,
Not farther than it's due, since they cannot change
Their element, to draw the thinner air. Milton.

The waters of Boantheras are so thin and light, that they swim upon the top of the stream of the river Hyamus. More.

To warm new milk pour any alkali, the liquor will remain at rest, though it appear somewhat thinner. Arbutnot.

3. Not close; separate by large spaces.

He pleas'd of the thin and builded audience
Of us, well not using long discourse. Pope.

Thou art weak; and full of art is he;
 Who could he that host seduce to sin,
 Whose fall has left the heavenly nation thin?
Dryden.

Northward, beyond the mountains we will go,
 Where rocks he cover'd with eternal snow;
 This herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields;
 The sand no gold, the mine no silver yields.
 Thin on the towers they stand; and on those few,
 A feeble, fainting, and dejected crew.
Dryden.

Already 'twas
 Has ravag'd more than half the globe; and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Addison.
 Sick with the loss of lane, what throngs pour in,
 Unpeople courts, and leave the senate thin! Young.

4. Not closely compacted or accumulated.
 Seven thin ears blushed with the east wind spring up. Geoffrey.

5. Exile; small.
 I hear the groans of ghosts;
 Thin, hollow sounds, and lamentable screams.
Dryden.

6. Not coarse; not gross in substance: as,
 a thin veil.

7. Not abounding.
 Ferrara is very large, but extremely thin of people.
Addison.

8. Not fat; not bulky; lean; slim; slender.

A thin gutted fox made a hard twist to wriggle his body into a hen-roost; and when he had stuffed his guts well, the hole was too little to get out again.
L'Estrange.

THIN. adv. Not thickly.

Spain is thin sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and the natives being exhausted in such vast territories as they possess. Bacon.

Remove the swelling epithets, thick laid
 As varnish on a harlot's cheek; the rest
 Thin sown with ought of profit or delight. Milton.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise,
 That last infinity of noble mind,
 To scorn delights, and love laborious days;
 But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
 And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
 Comes the blind fury with the' abhorred sheers,
 And fits the thin-skin life. Milton.

Thin-leaved arbutus hazle grafts receives,
 And plumes huge apples bear, that bore but leaves.
Dryden.

A country gentlewoman, if it be like to rain, goes not abroad thin clad. Locke.

To THIN. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make thin or rare; to make less thick.

The serum of the blood is neither acid nor alkaline:
 oil of vitriol thickens, and oil of tartar thins
 it a little. Arbuthnot.

2. To make less close or numerous.

The bill against root and branch, never passed, till both houses were sufficiently thinned and overruled.
King Charles.

To unload the branches, or the leaves to thin,
 That suck the vital moisture of the vine. Dryden.

'Tis Caesar's sword has made Rome's senate little,
 And thinn'd its ranks. Addison.

3. To attenuate.

The vapours, by the solar heat
 Thinn'd and exhal'd, rise to their airy seat. Blackm.

THIN. pronoun. [thin, Gothick; thin, Saxon; dijn, Dutch.] Belonging or relating to thee; the pronoun possessive of thou. It is used for thy when the substantive is divided from it; as, this is thy house; thine is this house; this house is thine.

Thou hast her, France; let her be thine, for we Have no such daughter. Shakespeare.

THING. n. f. [Sing. Sax. ding, Dut.]

1. Whatever is; not a person. A general word.

Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.
 —You have a thing for me!
 It is a common thing—
 —Ha!
 —To have a foolish wife. Shakespeare.

The great matter he found busy in packing up his things against his departure. Kneller.
 The remnant of the meat-offering is a thing most holy. Leviticus.

Says the master, You devour the same things that they would have eaten, mice and all. L'Estrange.

When a thing is capable of good proof in any kind, men ought to rest satisfied in the best evidence for it which that kind of things will bear, and beyond which better would not be expected, supposing it were true. Wilkins.

I should blush to own to rude a thing.
 As 'tis to shun the brother of my king. Dryden.

Wicked men, who understand any thing of wildom, may see the imprudence of worldly and irreligious courses. Tillotson.

Princes, when they come to know the true state of things, are not unwilling to prevent their own ruin. Davenant.

2. It is used in contempt.

I have a thing in prose, began above twenty-eight years ago, and almost finished: it will make a four shilling volume. Swift.

3. It is used of persons in contempt, or sometimes with pity.

See, sons, what things you are! how quickly nature
 Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
 For thus the foolish over-careful fathers
 Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care. Shakespeare.

A thing by neither man or woman priz'd,
 And scarcely known enough to be despis'd. Dryden.

Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man.
Congreve.

The poor thing sigh'd, and, with a blessing expressed with the utmost vehemence, turned from me. Addison.

I'll be this subject thing no more,
 Love, give me back my heart again. Granville.

4. It is used by Shakespeare once in a sense of honour.

I lov'd the maid I married; never man
 Sigh'd truer breath: but that I fee thee here,
 Thou noble thing! more dances my wrapt heart.
Shakespeare.

To THINK. v. n. pret. thought. [thank-gan, Gothick; Dencean, Saxon; dencken,
 Dutch.]

1. To have ideas; to compare terms or things; to reason; to cogitate; to perform any mental operation, whether of apprehension, judgment, or illation.

Thinking, in the propriety of the English tongue, signifies that sort of operation of the mind about its ideas, wherein the mind is active, where it, with some degree of voluntary attention, considers any thing. Locke.

What am I? or from whence? for that I am
 I know, because I think; but whence I came,
 Or how this frame of mine began to be,
 What other being can disclose to me? Dryden.

Those who perceive dully, or retain ideas in their minds ill, will have little matter to think on. Locke.

It is an opinion, that the soul always thinks, and that it has the actual perception of ideas in itself constantly, and that actual thinking is as inseparable from the soul, as actual extension is from the body.
Locke.

These are not matters to be slightly and superficially thought upon.

His experience of a good prince must give great satisfaction to every thinking man. Addison.

2. To judge; to conclude; to determine.

Let them marry to whom they think best, only to their father's tribe shall they marry. Numbers.

I fear we shall not find
 This long desired king such as was thought. Daniel.

Can it be thought that I have kept the gospel terms of salvation, without ever so much as intending, in any serious and deliberate manner, either to know them, or keep them. Law.

3. To intend.

Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give.
 As one near death to those that wish him live.
Shakespeare.

4. To imagine; to fancy.
 Something since his coming forth is thought of,
 which

Imports the kingdom so much fear and danger,
 That his return was not requir'd. Shakespeare.

Edmund, I think, is gone,
 In pity of his misery, to dispatch
 His nighted life. Shakespeare.

We may not be startled at the breaking of the exterior earth; for the face of nature hath provoked men to think of and observe such a thing. Barnes.

Those who love to live in gardens, have never thought of contriving a winter garden. Spectator.

5. To muse; to meditate.

You pine, you languish, love to be alone,
 Think much, speak little, and in speaking sigh.
Dryden.

6. To recollect; to observe.

We are come to have the warrant.
 —Well thought upon; I have it here about me.
Shakespeare.

Think upon me, my God, for good, according to all that I have done. Nicholas.

7. To judge; to be of opinion.

If your general acquaintance be among ladies, provided they have no ill reputation, you think you are safe. Swift.

8. To consider; to doubt; to deliberate.

Any one may think with himself, how then can any thing live in Mercury and Saturn? Bentley.

9. To THINK on. To contrive; to light upon by meditation.

Still the work was not complete,
 When Venus thought on a decent. Swift.

10. To THINK of. To estimate.

The opinions of others whom we know and think well of are no ground of dissent. Locke.

To THINK. v. a.

1. To imagine; to image in the mind; to conceive.

Charity thinketh no evil. 1 Corinthians.
 Nor think superfluous others aid. Milton.

Think nought a trifle, though it small appear
 young.

2. To believe; to esteem.

Nor think superfluous others aid. Milton.

3. To THINK much. To grudge.

He thought not much to clothe his enemies.
Milton.

If we consider our infinite obligations to God, we have no reason to think much to sacrifice to him our dearest interests in this world. Tillotson.

4. To THINK scorn. To disdain.

He thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone.
Ezra.

{ Me THINKETH. It seems to me. }
 { Me THOUGHT. It appeared to me. }

These are anomalous phrases of long continuance and great authority, but not easily reconciled to grammar. In me thinketh, the verb being of the third person, seems to be referred not to the thing, and is therefore either active, as signifying to cause to think; or has the sense of seems, me thinks it seems to me.
Mc thought I saw the grave where Laura lay.
Johnson.

Me thinketh the running of the forenoon is like that of Ahimaez. 2 Samuel.

THINKER. n. f. [from think.] One who thinks in a certain manner.

No body is made any thing by hearing of rules, or laying them up in his memory; practice must settle the habit; you may as well hope to make a good musician by a lecture on the art of music as a coherent thinker, or strict reasoner, by a set of rules. Locke.

If a man had an ill-favoured nose, deep thinking would impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

THINKING. n. f. [from think.] Imagination; cogitation; judgment.

He put it by once; but, in my thinking, he would fain have had it. Shakespeare.

If we did think
Hicant emptions were above the earth,
And that our spiritual objects, he should still Dwell in his sinfulness; but I am afraid
I am here below the moon, nor worth
His eyes considering. Shakespeare.
I heard a hard to find,
Was a monk, to my thoughts, please'd the king. Shakespeare.

THINK A MAN, to my thinking, very likely to set A widow. Audrey.

THICKLY, adv. [from thick.]

1. Not thickly.
2. Not closely; not numerously.
3. Thickly, properly, upward, that the earth was before the flood. Bacon.
Or wells are thick in mud, nor best men in Or hear how this number, spent with water, Dryden.

THICKNESS, n. f. [from thick.]

1. The contrary to thinness; exility; thickness.

2. The mass of matter in the circles, and holes, and sides,
of a substance, as of the skin. Bacon.

3. The mass of matter in the circles, and holes, and sides,
of a substance, as of the skin. Bacon.

4. The mass of matter in the circles, and holes, and sides,
of a substance, as of the skin. Bacon.

5. The mass of matter in the circles, and holes, and sides,
of a substance, as of the skin. Bacon.

ping the breath.

I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their passions' accents in their tears,
And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off
Shakespeare.

As when Anteus in Itraffa strove
With Jove's Achides, and oft t'nd full note,
Receiving from his mother earth new strength,
Toss'd from his fall and fiercer grapple pour'd,
Throttled at length in th' air, expand and fell.

His throat half throttled with corrupted phlegm,
And breathing through his jaws a belching steam.
Dryden.

The throttling quinsy 'tis my fear appears,
And rheumatism I send to rack the joints.

Throttle thyself with an ell of strong tape,
For thou hast not a groat to atone for a rap.

vain.

Pope.

2. [from thrust: as we say, a push; a breaking out.] By this name are called small, round, superficial ulcerations, which appear first in the mouth; but as they proceed from the obstruction of the emulsaries of the saliva, by the lentor and viscosity of the humour, they may affect every part of the alimentary duct, except the thick guts: they are just the same in the inward parts as scabs in the skin, and fall off from the inside of the bowels like a crust: the nearer they approach to a white colour the less dangerous.

Arbuthnot.

THUMPER. n. f. [from thump.] The person or thing that thumps.

THUNDER. n. f. [Donner, German; Sax. dunder, Swedish; donder, Dutch; tonnerre, French.]

1. Thunder is a most bright flame rising on a sudden, moving with great violence, and with a very rapid velocity, through the air, according to any determination, upwards from the earth, horizontally, obliquely, downwards, in a right line, or in several right lines, as it were in serpentine tracks, joined at various angles, and commonly ending with a loud noise or rattling. Muschenbroek.

2. In popular and poetick language, thunder is commonly the noise, and lightning the flash; though thunder is sometimes taken for both.

I do not bid the thunder bearer shoot,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove. Shakespeare.

The revenging gods
Gaint panicles all the thunder bend. Shakespeare.
Wing'd with red lightning and impetuous rage,
Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases now
To below through the vast and boundless deep. Milton.

3. Any loud noise or tumultuous violence.
So fierce he laid about him, and dealt blows
On either side, that neither mail could hold
No shield defend the thunder of his throws. Spenser.

Here will we face this storm of insolence,
Nor fear the noisy thunder; let it roll,
Then burst, and spend at once his idle rage. Rowe.

To THUNDER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make thunder.

His nature is too noble for the world;
He would not suffer Neptune for his trident,
Nor Jove for a power to thunder. Shakespeare.

2. To make a loud or terrible noise.

So soon as some few notable examples had thundered a duty into the subjects hearts, he soon showed no baseness of suspicion. Shakespeare.

His dreadful name late through all Spain did thunder,
And Hercules' two pillars standing near

Did make to quake and fear. Spenser.
His dreadful voice no more
Would thunder in my ears. Milton.

Like a black sheet the whelming billow spread,
Burst o'er the boat, and thunder'd on his head. Pope.

To THUNDER. v. a.

1. To emit with noise and terrour.

Oracles severe
Were daily thunder'd in our general's ear,
That by his daughter's blood we must appease
Diana's kindled wrath. Dryden.

2. To publish any denunciation or threat:
An archdeacon, as being a prelate, may thunder out an ecclesiastical censure. Antcliffe.

THUNDERBOLT. n. f. [thunder and bolt, as it signifies an arrow.]

1. Lightning; the arrows of heaven.

If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down. Shakespeare.

Let the lightning of this thunderbolt, which hath been so severe a punishment to one, be a terror to all. King Charles.

My heart does beat,
As if 'twere forging thunderbolts for Jove. Denham.
Who can omit the Gracchi, who declare
The Scipios' worth, those thunderbolts of war? Dryden.

The most remarkable piece in Antonine's pillar, is Jupiter Pluvius sending down rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies; which is the greatest confirmation of the story of the Christian legion. Addison.

2. Fulmination; denunciation: properly ecclesiastical.

He severely threatens such with the thunderbolt of excommunication. Hakewill.

THUNDERCLAP. n. f. [thunder and clap.]
Explosion of thunder.

The kindly bird that bears Jove's thunderclap,
One day did learn the simple scabree,
Proud of his highest service, and good hap,
That made all other fowls his thralls to be. Spenser.

When some dreadful thunderclap is nigh,
The winged fire shoots swiftly through the sky;
Strikes and consumes are fear'd it does appear,
And, by the sudden ill, prevents the fear. Dryden.

When suddenly the thunderclap was heard,
It took us unprepared and out of guard. Dryden.

THUNDERER. n. f. [from thunder.] The power that thunders.

How dare you, ghosts,
Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt you know
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coats? Shakespeare.
Had the old Greeks discover'd your abuse,
Crete had not been the cradle of your god;
On that small island they had look'd with scorn,
And in Great Britain thought the thunderer born. Waller.

When the bold Typhoeus
Forc'd great Jove from his own heav'n to fly,
The lesser gods, that shud'd his proud state,
All suffer'd in the evil'd thunderer's fate. Dryden.

THUNDEROUS. adj. [from thunder.] Producing thunder.

Look in and see each blissful deity,
How he before the thunderous throne doth lie. Mt.

THUNDERSHOWER. n. f. [thunder and shower.] A rain accompanied with thunder.

The concert is long in delivering, and at last it comes like a thundershower, full of sulphur and darkness, with a terrible crack. Stillingfleet.

In thundershowers the winds and clouds are oftentimes contrary to one another, especially if hail falls, the sultry weather below directing the wind one way and the cold above the clouds another. Denham.

THUNDERSTONE. n. f. [thunder and stone.]
A stone fabulously supposed to be emitted by thunder; thunderbolt.

Fear no more the lightning flash,
Nor th' all-dreaded thunderstone. Shakespeare.

To THUNDERSTRIKE. v. a. [thunder and strike.]

1. To blast or hurt with lightning.

I remained as a man thunderstricken, not daring,
may not able, to behold that power. Sidney.

The overthrown he rais'd, and as a herd
Of goats, or tinous flock, together throng'd, Drove them before him thunderstruck. Milton.

With the voice divine
Nigh thunderstruck, th' exalted man, to whom Such high attit was giv'n, a while survey'd With wonder. Milton.

'Tis said that thunderstruck Enceladas Lies fretted in flames. Addison.

2. To astonish with any thing terrible.

Fears from our hearts took
The very life; to be thunderstruck
With such a voice. Chapman.

THUNDEROUS. adj. [thunderer, Latin.]

THURIFICATION. n. f. [thuris and facio, Latin.] The act of fuming with incense; the act of burning incense.

The several acts of worship which are required to be performed to images are processions, genuflections, thurifications, deseculations, and oblations. Stillingfleet.

THURSDAY. n. f. [thorsgday, Danish; from thor: thor was the son of Odin; yet in some of the northern parts they worshipped the supreme deity under his name, attributing the power over all things, even the inferior deities, to him. Stillingfleet.] The fifth day of the week.

THUS. adv. [Sur, Saxon.]

1. In this manner; in this wife.

It cannot be that they who speak thus, should thus judge. Hooker.

The knight him calling asked who he was?
Who lifting up his head, him answer'd thus. Spenser.

I returned with similar proof enough,
With tokens thus, and thus. Shakespeare.

To be thus is nothing; Shakespeare.
I have sin'd against the Lord, and thus and that have I done. Jobson.

The Romans used a like wise endeavour, and whiles in a higher, in a wiser strain, making some cold a deity; thus seeking peace, not by an oath, but by prayer. Hobday.

That the principle that sets on work these organs, is nothing else but the modification of matter thus or thus posited, is false. Judge Hale.

Beware, I warn thee yet, to tell thy griefs
In terms becoming majesty to hear
I warn thee thus, because I know thy temper
Is insolent. Dryden.

Thus is the triumph of soft peace I reign. Dryden.

All were attentive to the godlike man,
When from his lofty couch he thus began. Dryden.

2. To this degree; to this quantity.

A countess of state in Spain said to his master,
I will tell you majesty thus much for your comfort, your majesty hath but two enemies; whereof the one is all the world, and the other your own ministers. Lacon.

Even thus wife, that is, thus peaceable, were very peaceable; thus peaceable among themselves, though without grace, thus peaceable by wife nature very like grace. Hobday.

He said, Thus far extend, thus far thy bounds. Milton.

Thus much concerning the first earth, and its production and form. Burnet.

No man reasonably pretends to know thus much,
but he must pretend to know all things. Tillotson.

THY

This you must do to inherit life; and if you have come up thus factually participate in it. Wells.
TO THWACK. v. a. [Saccian, Saxon.] To strike with something blunt and heavy; to thrash; to bang; to belabour. A ludicrous word.

He shall not stay;
 We'll thwack him hence with distaffs. Shakespeare.
 Nick fell foul upon John Bull, to snatch the cudgel he had in his hand, that he might thwack Lewis with it. Arbutnot.

These long fellows, as lightly as they are, should find their jackets well thwacked. Arbutnot.
THWACK. n. f. [from the verb.] A heavy hard blow.

But Talgol grist with a hard thwack
 Twice bruised his head, and twice his back. Hudibras.

They place several pots of rice, with cudgels in the neighbourhood of each pot; the monkeys descend from the trees, take up the arms, and belabour one another with a storm of thwacks. Addison.

THWART. adj. [Thynn, Sax. dwars, Dut.]

 Upward and downward thwarting and convolv'd. Thomson.

2. To cross; to oppose; to traverse; to contravene.

Some sixteen months and longer might have staid,
 If crooked fortune had not thwarted me. Shalyp.
 Laffer had been

The thwartings of your dispositions, if You had not shew'd how you were dispos'd
 Ere they lack power to cross you. Shakespeare.
 The understanding and will then never disagreed;
 For the propensities of the one never thwarted the inclinations of the other. South.

The rays both good and bad, of equal pow'r,
 Each thwarting other made a mingled hour. Dryd.
 In vain did I the godlike youth declare:
 The more I begg'd, they thwarted me the more. Addison.

Neptune aton'd, his wrath shall now refrain,
 Or thwart the synod of the gods in vain. Pope.
 By thwarting passions toil, by cares oppress'd,
 He found the tempest picture'd in his breast. Young.

TO THWART. v. n. To be in opposition to.

It is easy to be imagined what reception any proposition shall find, that shall at all thwart with these internal oracles. Lucke.

These goods thyself can on thyself bestow. Dryden.

TIA. } n. f. [tiare, Fr. tiara, Lat.] A

TIA'RA. } drefs for the head; a diadem.
 His back was turn'd, but not his brightwells hid;
 Of beaming sunny rays a golden tiar

Circled his head. Milton.
 This royal robe and this tiara wore Old Priam, and this golden sceptre bore
 In full assemblies. Dryden.

A tiar wreath'd her head with many a fold,
 Her waist was circled with a zone of gold. Pope.

Farmer she seem'd, distinguish'd from the rest,
 And better mind disclos'd, as better dress:
 A bright tiara round her forehead ty'd
 To jester bounds confin'd its rising pride. Prior.

TO TICE. v. a. [from entice.] To draw; to allure.

Lovely enchanting language, sugar-cane,
 Honey of roses, whither wilt thou fly?
 Hath some fond lover twi'd thee to thy bane?
 And wilt thou leave the church, and love a fly? Herbert.

TICK. n. f. [This word seems contracted from ticket, a tally on which debts are scored.]

1. Score; trust.

If thou hast the heart to try 't,
 I'll lend thee back thyself awhile,
 And once more for that carcase vile Fight upon tick. Hudibras.

When the money is got into hands that have bought all that they have need of, whoever needs any thing else must go on tick, or batter for it. Locke.

You would see him in the kitchen weighing the beef and butter, paying ready money, that the maids might not run a tick at the market. Arbutnot.

2. [tique, Fr. teke, Dut.] The house of dogs or sheep.

Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance. Shakespeare.

3. The case which holds the feathers of a bed.

TO TICK. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run on score.

2. To trust; to score.

 Can tickle when the wound is? Shakespeare.
 The mind is moved in great vehemency only by tickling some parts of the body. Becon.

There is a sweettarts in good verie, which tickles even while it hurts; and no man can be heartily angry with him who pleases him ag. mit his will. Dryden.

It is a good thing to laugh at any rate; and if a straw can tickle a man, it is an instrument of happiness. Dryden.

2. To please by slight gratifications.

Dantes, that of all manners of fire could best conceive of golden cloquence, being withal torred
 by Mulidorus's praises, had his brain tormented, that he became slave to that which he that used to be his servant offered to give him. Sidney.

Expectation tickling Scotch spirits, Sets all on hazard. Shakespeare.

Such a nature
 Ticked with good success, disdains the shadow
 Which it treads on at noon. Shakespeare.

I cannot rule my spleen,
 My scorn rebels, and tickles me within. Dryden.

Dance at the butt; in streets but scarce should
 To tickle, on thy straw, the liquid force. Dryden.

A drunkard the habitual thirst after his cups drives to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health, and perhaps of the joys of another life, the loss of which is such a good as he considers is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine. Lucke.

TO TICKLE. v. n. To feel titillation.

He with ever joy therefore Did tickle away his eye y vein,
 And his little heart, brought with all treach'ry's store,
 Was fill'd with hope, his purpose to obtain. Spenser.

TICKLE. adj. [I know not whence to deduce the sense of this word.] Tottering; unfixed; unstable; easily overturned.

When the last O'Neil began to stand upon some tickle terms, this fellow, called baron of Duncannon, was set up to bend him. Spenser.

Thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milkmaid, if she be in love, may fight it off. Shalyp.

The state of Nonnandy Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone. Shakespeare.

TICKLISH. adj. [from tickle.]

1. Sensible to titillation; easily tickled.

The palm of the hand, though it is as thin as skin as the other parts, yet is not ticklish, because it is accustomed to be touched. Bacon.

2. Tottering; uncertain; unfixed.

Ireland was a ticklish and unsettled state, more easy to receive distempers and mutations than England was. South.

Did it stand upon so ticklish and tottering foundation as some men's fancy hath placed it on,
 be no wonder should it frequently vary. Bacon.

3. Difficult; nice.

How shall our author hope a gentle fate,
 Who dares most impudently not translate?
 It had been civil, in these ticklish times,
 To fetch his fools and knaves from foreign climes. South.

TICKLISHNESS. n. f. [from ticklish.] The state of being ticklish.

TICKTACK. n. f. [tititrac, Fr.] A game at tables. Bailey.

TO TIDDER. } tenderly; to fondle.

TIDE. n. f. [tyb, Saxon; tyd, Dutch and Islandick.]

1. Time; season; while.

There they alight, in hope themselves to hide
 From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs in shade. Spenser.

They two forth passing
 Received those two fair brides, their love's delight
 Which, at the appointed tide,
 Each one did make his bride. Spenser.

What hath the day brought?
That in it golden letters should be set
Among the high tides to the calendar? Shakespeare.
At new-year's tide following, the king chose him master of the horse. Wolton.

2. Alternate ebb and flow of the sea.

That motion of the water called tides, is a rising and falling of the sea: the cause of this is the attraction of the moon, whereby the part of the water in the great ocean which is nearest the moon, being most strongly attracted, is raised higher than the rest; and the part opposite to it being least attracted, is also higher than the rest; and these two opposite rises of the surface of the water in the great ocean following the motion of the moon from east to west, and striking against the large coasts of the continents, from thence rebound back again, and so make floods and ebbs in narrow seas and rivers. Locke.

3. Commotion; violent confluence.

As in the tides of people once up, there went not stirring winds to make them more rough, so this people did light upon two ringleaders. Bacon.

4. Stream; course.

Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever lived in the tide of times. Shakespeare.
The rapid currents drive
Towards the retreating sea their furious tide. Milton.

But let not all the gold which Tagus hides,
And pays the sea in tributary tides,
Be bribe sufficient to corrupt thy breast,
Or violate with dreams thy peaceful rest. Dryden.

Continual tide Philips.
Flows from th' exhilarating fount. Philips.
To TIDE. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive with the stream.

Their images, the relics of the wreck,
Torn from the naked poop, are tided back
By the wild waves, and rudely thrown ashore. Dryden.

To TIDE. v. n. To pour a flood; to be agitated by the tide.

When from his dunt the foe still backward shrunk,
Wading within the Ouse, he dealt his blows,
And sent them, rolling, to the tiding Humber. Philips.

waiter or customhouse officer, who watches on board of merchant-ships till the duty of goods be paid, and the ships unloaded. Bailey.

TIDEWAITER. n. f. [tide and wait.] An officer who watches the landing of goods at the customhouse.

Employments will be in the hands of English men; nothing left for Irishmen but vicarages and seawater places. Swift.

TIDILY. adv. [from tidy.] Neatly;
readily.

TIDINESS. n. f. [from tidy.] Neatness;
readiness.

TIDINGS. n. f. [tidan, Saxon, to happen, to betide; tidende, Islandick.] News; an account of something that has happened; incidents related.

When her eyes she on the dwarf had set,
And saw the signs that deadly tidings speak,
She fell to ground for sorrowful regret. Spenser.
I shall make my master glad with these tidings. Shakespeare.

They win
Great numbers of each nation to receive,
With joy, the tidings brought from heav'n. Milton.

Portus, thy looks speak somewhat of importance:
What tidings doth thou bring? methinks I see Casual gladness sparkling in thy eyes. Addison.
The messengers of these glad tidings, by whom the covenant of mercy was proposed and ratified, was the eternal Son of his bosom. Rogers.

TIDY. adj. [tidie, Islandick.]

1. Seasonable.

If weather be faire and tidie, thy grain
Make speedie carriage, for leare of a raucous Taffer.

2. Neat; ready.

Wherever by yon barley-mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. Gay.

3. It seems to be here put by mistake or irony for untidy.

Thou whorson tiay Bartholomew boar-pig, when wilt thou leave fighting? Shakespeare.

To TIE. v. a. [tiān, tiān, Saxon.]

1. To bind; to fasten with a knot.

Tie the knee to the cart, and bring their calves home from them. Samuel.

Thousands of men and women, tied together in chains, were, by the cruel Turks, enforced to run as fast as their horses. Knotles.

2. To knit; to complicate.

We do not tie this knot with an intention to puzzle the argument; but the harder it is tied, we shall feel the pleasure more sensibly when we come to loose it. Burnet.

3. To hold; to fasten; to join so as not easily to be parted.

In bond of virtuous love together tied,
Together serv'd they, and together died. Fairfax.
The intermediate ideas tie the extremes so firmly together, and the probability is so clear, that assent necessarily follows it. Locke.

Certain theorems resolve propositions which depend on them, and are as firmly made out from thence, as if the mind went afresh over every link of the whole chain that ties them to first self-evident principles. Locke.

4. To hinder; to obstruct: with up in- tensive.

Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me
wail,
Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak. Shakespeare.

Melantius, stay,
You have my promise; and my last word
Retrains my tongue, but ties not up my sword. Waller.

Honour and good-nature may tie up his hands;
but as these would be very much strengthened by reason and principle, so without them they are only infruits. Addison.

5. To oblige; to constrain; to restrain; to confine.

Although they profess they agree with us touching a prescript form of prayer to be used in the church, they have declared that it shall not be prescribed as a thing whereunto they will tie their ministers. Hooker.

It is the cowardly terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake; he'll not feel wrongs
Which tie him to an answer. Shakespeare.

Cannot God make any of the appropriate acts of worship to become due only to himself? cannot he tie us to perform them to him? Stillington.

They tie themselves so strictly to unity of place, that you never see in any of their plays a scene change in the middle of an act. Dryden.

Not tied to rules of policy, you find Revenge less sweet than a forgiving mind. Dryden.
No one seems less tied up to a form of words. Locke.

The mind should, by several rules, be tied down to this, at last, uneasy talk; and will give it facility. Locke.

They have no uneasy expectations of what is to come, but are ever tied down to the present moment. Macburn.

A healthy man ought not to tie himself up to strict rules, nor to abstain from any sort of food in common use. Arbuthnot.

6. It may be observed of tie, that it has often the particles up and down joined to it, which are, for the most part, little more than emphatical, and which, when united with this word, have at least consequentially the same meaning.

TIE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Knot; fastening.

2. Bond; obligation.

The rebels that had shaken off the great yoke of obedience, had likewise cast away the tie of respect. South.

No forest, cave, or savage den
Holds more pernicious bonds than men;
Vows, oaths, and contracts they devise,
And tell us they are sacred ties. Waller.

3. A knot of hair.

The well-twain ties an equal homage claim,
And either shoulder has its share of fame. Young.

TIER. n. f. [tiere, tiere, old French; tyer, Dutch.] A row; a rank.

Formous, in his choler, discharg'd a tier of great ordnance amongst the thickest of them. Kneller.

TIERCE. n. f. [tiers, tiercer, Fr.] A vessel holding the third part of a pipe.

Go now deny his tierce. Ben Jonson.
Wit, like tierce claret, when 't begins to pall,
Neglected lies, and 's of no use at all;
But in its full perfection of decay
Turns vintage, and comes again to play. De Witt.

TYERCE. n. f. [from tyers, Fr.] A triplet; three lines.

TIFF. n. f. [A low word, I suppose without etymology.]

a column from the abacus to the capital. Bailey.

TIGER. n. f. [tigre, Fr. tigris, Latin.] A fierce beast of the leonine kind.

When the blast of war blows in your ear,
Then imitate the action of the tiger;

Sudden the fancies, fann'd upon the blood, Shelley.
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or the Hyrcanian tiger;

Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble. Shakespeare.

Has the steer,
At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
Ever plow'd for him? Thomson.

TIGHT. adj. [dicht, Dutch.]

1. Tense; close; not loose.

If the centre holes be not very deep, and the pikes fill them not very tight, the strength of the turning will alter the centre holes. Mason.

I do not like this running knot, it holds too tight; I may be stifled all of a sudden. Arbuthnot.
Every joint was well grooved; and the door did not move on hinges, but up and down like a fath, which kept my closet tight that very little water came in. Swift.

2. Free from fluttering rags; less than neat.

A tight maid, ere he for wine can ask,
Gusts his meaning, and unlooseth the flask. Dryden.

To begin the practice of an art with a light tincture of the rules, is to expose ourselves to the scorn of those who are judges. Dryden.

Malignant tempers, whatever kind of life they are engaged in, will discover their natural tincture of mind. Addison.

Few in the next generation who will not write and read, and have an early tincture of religion. Addison.

Size of her joy, and source of her delight!
 O! wing'd with pleasure, take thy happy flight,
 And give each future morn a tincture of thy white. Prior.

All manners take a tincture from our own,
 Or come discolour'd through our passions shown. Locke.

Have a care lest some darling science so far prevail over your mind, as to give a foreign tincture to all your other studies, and discolour all your ideas. Wau.

2. Extract of some drug made in spirits.

In tinctures drawn from vegetables, the superfluous spirit of wine distilled off, leaves the extract of the vegetable. Boyle.

To TINCTURE. v.a. [from the noun.]

1. To imbue or impregnate with some colour or taste.

The bright sun compacts the precious stone,
 Imparting radiant lustre like his own:
 He tinctures rubies with their rosy hue,
 And on the sapphire spreads a heavenly blue. Blackmore.

A little black paint will tincture and spoil twenty gay colours. Wau.

2. To imbue the mind.

Early were our minds tinctured with a distinguishing sense of good and evil; early were the seeds of a divine love, and holy fear of offending, sown in our hearts. Atterbury.

To TIND. v.a. [tendgan, Gothic; tendan, Saxon.] To kindle; to set on fire.

TINDER. n.f. [ty ndre, tendre, Saxon.] Any thing eminently inflammable placed to catch fire.

Strike on the tinder, ho!
 Give me a taper. Shakespeare.

To these shameful pastimes were their youth admitted, thereby adding, as it were, fire to tinder. Hakew.

Where sparks and fire do meet with tinder,
 Those sparks more fire will still engender. South.

Whoever our trading with England would hinder
 To inflame both the nations do plainly compare,
 Because Irish linen will soon turn to tinder. South.

And wool it is greasy, and quickly takes fire. South.

TINDERBOX. n.f. [tinder and box.] A box for holding tinder.

That worthy patriot, once the bellows
 And tinderbox of all his fellows. Hudibras.

He might even as well have employed his in catching moles, making lanterns and tinderboxes. Atterbury.

TINE. n.f. [tinne, Islandick.]

TIPSTAFF, n. f. [tip and staff.]

1. An officer with a staff tipped with metal.

2. The staff itself.

One had in his hand a tipstaff of a yellow cane, tipped at both ends with blue.

TIPSY, adj. [from tipple.] Drunk; overpowered with excess of drink.

The riot of the tipsy bacchanals,
Tearing the Thracian singer in their rage.

Welcome joy and feast,
Midnight shout and revelry,
Tipsy dance and jollity.

TIPTOE, n. f. [tip and toe.] The end of the toe.

Where the fond ape himself appearing high,
Upon his tiptoes stalketh stately by.

He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tip toe when this day is run'd.

And rouse him at the name of Crispian.
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tip toe on the misty mountains tops.

Religion stands on tip toe in our land,
Ready to pass to the American strand.

Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tip toes from the ground.

TIT, n. f. [tuyr, Dutch.]

1. Rank; row. Sometimes written tier.

Your lowest tire of ordnance must lie four foot clear above water, when all loading is in, or else those above peck pieces will be of small use at sea,
in any grown weather that makes the billows to rise.

Stood rank'd of seraphim another row,
In posture to displace their second tire

Of thunder.

In all those wars there were few tiremers, most of them being of one tire of ours of fifty banks.

2. [Corrupted from tier or tiera, or from attire.] A headpiece.

On her head she wore a tire of gold,
Adorn'd with gems and onches.

Here is her picture: let me see;
If I had such a tire, this face of mine

Were full as lovely as is this of hers.

The judge of torments, and the king of tears,
Now sits a burnish'd throne of quenchless fire,
And for his old fair robes of light he wears
A gloomy mantle of dark blood; the tire

That crowns his hated head, on high appears.

When the fury took her stand on high,
A hiss from all the dusky tire went round.

3. Furniture; apparatus.

Saint George's worth
Enkindles like desire of high exploits:
Immediate sieges, and the tire of war

Ru'd in thy eager mind.

When they first peep forth of the ground, they show their whole tire of leaves, then flowers, next seeds.

TO TIRE, v. a. [tipian, Saxon.]

1. To fatigue; to make weary; to harass;
to wear out with labour or tediousness.

Tir'd with toil, all hopes of safety past,
From pray'rs to wishes he descends at last.

For this a hundred voices I desire,
To tell thee what a hundred tongues would tire;
Yet never could be worthily express'd,
How deeply thou art seated in my breast.

2. It has often out added, to intend the signification.

Often a few that are stiff do tire out a greater number that are more moderate.

A lonely way
The obscurest Arabian wander'd half a day;
Tir'd out, at length a spreading stream he spy'd.

3. [from attire or tire, from tiera.] To dress the head.

Jemmel painted her face, and tired her head.

TO TIRE, v. n. [teopian, Saxon.] To fail with weariness.

TIREDNES, n. f. [from tired.] State of being tired; weariness.

It is not through the tiredness of the age of the earth, but through our own negligence, that it hath not satisfied us bountifully.

TIREDSOME, adj. [from tire.] Wearisome; fatiguing; tedious.

Since the incantating precept upon precept will prove tiresome to the reader, the poet must sometimes relieve the subject with a pleasant and pertinent digression.

Nothing is so tiresome as the works of those critics who write in a dogmatic way, without language, genius, or imagination.

TIRESONENESS, n. f. [from tiresome.] Act or quality of being tiresome.

TIREWOMAN, n. f. [tire and woman.] A woman whose business is to make dresses for the head.

Why should they not value themselves for this outside fashionableness of the tirewoman's making, when their parents have so early instructed them to do so.

TIRINGHOUSE, n. f. [tire and house, or TIRINGROOM, n. f. [room.] The room in which players dress for the stage.

This green plot shall be our stage, this hawthorn brake our tiringhouse.

Man's life's a tragedy; his mother's womb, from which he enters, is the tiringroom;

This spacious earth the theatre, and the stage that country which he lives in; passions, rage, folly, and vice, are actors.

TIRWIT, n. f. [vanellus, Latin.] A bird.

TIS, contracted for it is.

'Tis destiny unshunnable.

TIRICAL, adj. [from phthysical.] Consumptive.

TISSE, n. f. [tissu, French; tiran, to weave, Norman Saxon.] Cloth interwoven with gold or silver, or figured colours.

In their glittering tissues emblaz'd
Holy memorials, acts of zeal and love, Recorded eminent.

A robe of tissue, stiff with golden wire;
An upper vest, once Helen's rich attire;
From Argos by the fam'd adulteress brought,
With golden flow'rs and winding foliage wrought.

TO TISSE, v. a. [from the noun.] To interweave; to variegate.

The chariot was covered with cloth of gold tissed upon blue.

They have been always frank of their blessings to countenance any great action; and then, according as it should prosper, to tissue upon it fine pretence or other.

Mercy will fit between,
Thron'd in celestial seen,
With radiant feet the tissed clouds down steering.

TIT, n. f.

1. A small horse: generally in contempt.

No stiring of pasture with baggagely tit,
With ragged, with aged, and evil at hit.

Thou might'st have taken example
From what thou read'st in story;
Being as worthy to sit
On an embling tit.

As thy predecessor Dury.

2. A woman: in contempt.

What does this envied tit, but away to her father with a tale?

A willing tit that will venture her corps with you.

Short pains for thee, for me a son and heir,
Girls cost as many throes in bringing forth;
Beside, when born, the tit are little worth.

3. A tirmouse or tomtit. [parus, Latin.] A bird.

TITBIT, n. f. [properly tidbit; tid, tender, and bit.] Nice bit; nice food.

TITHE, n. f. [teōða, Saxon, tenth.]

1. The tenth part; the part assigned to the maintenance of the ministry.

Many have made witty invectives against tithe: they say, that it is a pity the devil should have God's part, which is the tithe.

Sometimes comes she with a tithe pig's tail,
Tickling the parson as he lies asleep,
Then dreams he of another benefice.

2. The tenth part of any thing.

I have searched man by man, boy by boy; the tithe of a hair was never lost in my house before.

Since the first sword was drawn about this question, Ev'ry tithe foul 'mongst many thousand times
Hath been as dear as Heben.

3. Small part; small portion, unless it be misprinted for titles.

Offensive wars for religion are seldom to be approved, unless they have some mixture of civil tithe.

TO TITHE, v. a. [teōðian, Saxon.] To tax; to levy the tenth part.

When I come to the tithe of them, I will tithe them one with another, and will make an *tithe*man the *tithe*man.

By decimation and a tithe death,
If thy revenges hunger for that food
Which nature loathes, take thou the destin'd tithe.

When thou hast made an end of *tithe*ing all the *tithe*s of thine increase, the third year, the year of *tithe*ing, give unto the Levite, stranger, fatherless, and widow.

TO TITHE, v. n. To pay tithe.

For lamb, pig, and calf, and for other the tithe, Tithe to as thy cattle the lord do not strike.

TITHEABLE, adj. [from tithe.] Subject to the payment of *tithe*s; that of which *tithe*s may be taken.

The papist priest shall, on taking the oath of allegiance to his majesty, be entitled to a tenth part or tithe of all things titheable in Ireland belonging to the papists, within their respective parishes.

TITHER, n. f. [from tithe.] One who gathers *tithe*s.

TITHING, n. f. [tithinga, law Latin, from tithe.]

1. Tithing is the number or company of ten men with their families knit together in a society, all of them being bound to the king for the peaceable and good behaviour of each of their society: of these companies there was one chief person, who, from his office, was called (toothingman) tithingman; but now he is nothing but a constable.

Poor Tom, who is whipt from tithing to tithing and beck punished and imprisoned.

2. Tithe; tenth part due to the priest.

Though vicar be bad, or the parson be evil,
Go not for thy tithing thyself to the devil.

TITHINGMAN, n. f. [tithing and man.] A petty peaceofficer; an under constable.

His bonded is not at his command further than his prince's service; and all every tithingman may controul him.

nature, that this is but too just a picture of him.
Broome.

23. After a verb, it notes the object.
Give me some wine; fill full:
I drink to th' general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo. Shakespeare.
Had the methods of education been directed to their right end, this too necessary could not have been neglected. Locke.
This lawfulness of judicial process appears from these legal courts erected to minister to it in the apostle's days. Kettleworth.
Many of them have exposed to the world the private misfortunes of families. Pope.

24. Noting the degree.
This weather-glass was so placed in the cavity of a small receiver, that only the slender part of the pipe, to the height of four inches, remained exposed to the open air.
Tell her, thy brother languishes to death. Addison.
A crow, though hatched under a hen, and who never has seen any of the works of its kind, makes its nest the same, to the laying of a stick, with all the nests of that species.
If he employs his abilities to the best advantage, the time will come when the Supreme Governor of the world shall proclaim his worth before men and angels. Spectator.

25. Before day, to notes the present day;
before morrow, the day next coming;

before night, either the present night, or night next coming.

Banquo, thy foul's fight,
If it find bear's, must find it out to night. Shaks.
To day they char'd the bear. Ormay.
This ought rather to be called a full purpose of committing sin to day, than a resolution of leaving it to morrow. Colemy.

26. To day, to night, to morrow, are used, not very properly, as substantives in the nominative and other cases.
To morrow, and to morrow, and to morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakespeare.
The father of Solomon's house will have private conference with one of you the next day after to morrow. Bacon.
To day is ours, why do we fear?
To day is ours, we have it here;
Let's banish bus'ness, banish sorrow,
To the gods belongs to morrow.
To morrow will deliver all her charms
Into my arms, and make her mine for ever. Dryden.

For what to morrow shall disclose,
May spoil what you to night propose;
England may change, or Cloe stray;
Love and life are for to day. Prior.

TOAD. n. f. [taðe, Saxon.] A paddock; an animal resembling a frog; but the frog leaps, the toad crawls: the toad is accustomed venomous, perhaps without reason.

From th' extremest upward of thy head,
To the descent and dust below thy foot,
A most toad-spotted traitor. Shakespeare.

I had rather be a toad,
And live upon the vapour of a dungeon,
Than keep a corner in the thing I love
For others use. Shakespeare.

In the great plague there were seen, in divers ditches about London, many toads that had tails three inches long, whereas toads usually have no tails. Bacon.

Diogenes one frosty morning came into the market-place shaking, to shew his tolerance; many of the people came about him, pitying him. Photo passing by, and knowing he did it to be seen, said, If you pity him indeed, let him alone to himself.

TOL

Bacon.

There wants nothing but consideration of our own eternal weal, a tolerance or endurance of being made happy here, and blessed eternally.

Hammond.

To TOLerate. v. a. [tolero, Latin; tolerer, French.] To allow for as not to hinder; to suffer; to pass uncensured.

Inasmuch as they did resolve to remove only such things of that kind as the church might best spare, retaining the residue, their whole counsel is, in this point, utterly condemned, as having either proceeded from the blindness of those times, or from negligence, or from desire of honour and glory, or from an erroneous opinion that such things might be tolerated for a while.

Hooker.

We shall tolerate flying horses, harpies, and infyras; for these are poetical fancies, whose shaded moralities requite their substantial falsities.

Brown.

Men should not tolerate themselves one minute in any known sin.

Decay of Piety.

Crying should not be tolerated in children.

Lodge.

We are fully convinced that we shall always tolerate them, but not that they will tolerate us.

Swift.

TOLERATION. n. f. [tolero, Lat.] Allowance given to that which is not approved.

 His will too strong to bend, too proud to learn. Cowley.

Groundless prejudices and weaknesses of conscience, instead of tendernefs, mislead too many others, too many, otherwise good men. Spaul.

It is too much to build a doctrine of so mighty consequence upon so obscure a place of scripture. Locke.

These ridiculous stories abide with us too long,
 and too far influence the weaker part of mankind. Watts.

2. It is sometimes doubled to increase its emphasis; but this duplication always seems harsh, and is therefore laid aside.

Oh, that this too too solid flesh would melt!
Shakespeare.

Sometimes it would be full, and then
 Oh! too soon decreate again;
 Eclips'd sometimes, that would so fall,
 There would appear no hope at all. Suckling.

3. Likewise; also.

See what a tongue is laid upon your hate;
 And I, for winking at your discords too,
 Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakespeare.

Let on my cup no wars be found,
 Let those incite to quarrels too,
 Which wine itself enough can do. Oldham.

The arriving to such a disposition of mind as shall make a man take pleasure in other men's sins, is evident from the text, and from experience too. South.

It is better than letting our trade fall for want of current pledges, and better too than borrowing money of our neighbours. Locke.

A counter and a patnot too. Pope.

Let those eyes that view
 The daring crime, behold the vengeance too. Pope.

 All levied in my name, have in my name
 Took their discharge. Shakespeare.

He is God in his friendship as well as in his nature, and therefore we sinful creatures are not took upon advantages, nor consumed in our provocations. South.

Suddenly the thunder-clap Took us unprepared. Dryden.

The same device enclosed the athers of men or boys, maids or matrons; for when the thought took,

though at first it received its rise from flesh, it particular occasion, the ignorance of the sculptors applied it promiscuously. Addison.

This took up some of his hours every day. Speck.

The riders would leap them over my hand; and one of the emperor's huntsmen, upon a large counter, took my foot, those and all. Swift.

Leaving Polybus, I took my way
 To Cyrrha's temple. Pope.

TOOL. n. f. [tol, tool, Saxon.]

1. Any instrument of manual operation.

In mulberries the sap is towards the bark only,
 into which if you cut a little, it will come forth;
 but if you pierce it deeper with a tool, it will be
 dry. Bacon.

They found in many of their mines more gold than earth, and metal, which the Americans not regarding, greedily exchanged for hammers, knives, axes, and the like tools of iron. Heylin.

Arm'd with such gardening tools as art, yet rude,
 Gullies of fire had form'd. Milton.

The ancients had some secret to harden the edges of their tools. Addison.

 which I do not fully understand.

This writer should wear a tooting hurn. Howell.

TOOTH. n. f. plural teeth. Good, Saxon;
tand, Dutch.

1. The teeth are the hardest and smoothest bones of the body; about the seventh or eighth month they begin to pierce the edge of the jaw: the dentes incisivi, or fore teeth of the upper jaw, appear first, and then those of the lower jaw: after them come out the canini or eye teeth, and last of all the molars or grinders: about the seventh year they are thrust out by new teeth, and if these teeth be lost they never grow again; but some have shed their teeth twice: about the one-and-twentieth year the two last of the molars spring up, and they are called dentes sa- piencie. Quincy.

Avant, you curs!
 Be thy mouth or black or white,
 Teeth that poison us at bite. Shakespeare.

Teeth that deceive with characters of brains
 A forced residence against the tooth of time,
 And azure of oblivion. Shakespeare.

The teeth alone among the bones continue to grow in length during a man's whole life, as appears by the unsightly length of one tooth when its opposite happens to be pulled out. Ray.

2. Taste; palate.

These are not dishes for thy dainty tooth;
 What, hast thou got an ulcer in thy mouth?
 Why stand'st thou picking? Dryden.

there are tortoises both of land and water.
In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stilt. Shakspeare.

A living tortoise being turned upon its back, not being able to make use of its paws for the returning of itself, because they could only bend towards the belly, it could help itself only by its neck and head; sometimes one side, sometimes another, by pushing against the ground, to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out where the inequality of the ground might permit it to roll its shell. Ray.

2. A form into which the ancient soldiers used to throw their troops, by bending down, and holding their bucklers above their heads so that no darts could hurt them.

Their targets in a tortoise cast, the foes

Could many a wanton wreath. Milton.

Aqueous vapours, like a dry wind, pass through so long and tortuous a pipe of lead. Boyle.

2. Mischievous. [Thus I explain it, on supposition that it is derived from tort, wrong; but it may mean crooked: as we say, crooked ways for bad practices, crook- ed being regularly enough opposite to right. This in some copies is tortious, and therefore from tort.]

Ne ought he car'd whom he endamaged
By tortuous wrong, or whom bereav'd of right. Spenser.

TORTURE. n. f. [torture, Fr. tortura,
Latin.]

that gay and pleasing countenance accompanying love. Deham.

TORY. n. f. [A cant term, derived, I suppose, from an Irish word signifying a savage.] One who adheres to the ancient constitution of the state, and the apostolical hierarchy of the church of England: opposed to a whig.
The knight is more a tory in the country than the town, because it more advances his interest. Addison.

This protestant zealot, this English divine,
In church and in state was of principles found,
Was truer than steel to the Hanover line,
And griev'd that a tory should live above ground. Swift.

Money serves for the touchstone of common honesty. L'Estrange.

Time is the surest judge of truth. I am not vain enough to think I have left no truths in this, which that touchstone will not discover. Dryden.

TOUCHWOOD. n. s. [touch and wood.]
Rotten wood used to catch the fire struck from the flint.

A race of resolute stout trees they are, so abounding with metal and heat, that they quickly take fire, and become touchwood. Howell.

To make white powder, the powder of rotten willows is best; frank, or touchwood prepared, might make it ruffier. Brown.

TOUCHY. adj. [from touch.] Peevish;
irritable; irascible; apt to take fire.

A low word.
You are upon a touchy point, and therefore treat
so nice a subject with proportionable caution. Collier.

You are to touchy, and take things too hotly, I am sure there must be some mistake in this. Arbutnot.

TOUGH. adj. [rob, Sax.]

1. Yielding to flexure or extension without fracture; not brittle.

Of bodies some are fragile, and some are tough,
and not fragile. Bacon.

2. Stiff; not easily flexible.
The bow he drew,
And almost join'd the horns of the tough engh. Dryden.

Fate with nature's law would strive,
To show plain-dealing once an age may thrive,
And when so tough a frame he could not bend,
Exceeded her commission to befriend. Dryden.

3. Not easily injured or broken.
O fides, you are too tough!
Will you yet hold? Shakespeare.

A body made of brass the crane demands
For her lov'd nursing, strong with nerves of wire, Tough to the last, and with no toil to tire. Dryden.

4. Viscous; clammy; rosy; tenacious.

Were it permitted, he'd make the tour of the whole system of the sun. Arbutnot and Page.

2. Turn; revolution. In both these senses it is rather French than English.

First Ptolemy his scheme collected wrought,
And of machines a wild provision brought;
Obs contriv'd and eccentric he prepared;
Cycles and epicycles, solid spheres
In order plac'd, and with bright globes inlaid,
To solve the tours by heavenly bodies made. Blackmore.

3. In Milton it is probably tower; elevation; high flight.

The bird of Jove loop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayest plume before him drove. Milton.

TOURNAMENT. } n. s. [tournementum, TOURNIEY. } low Latin.]

1. Tilt; joust; military sport; mock encounter.

They might, under the pretence
Of tilts and tournaments,
Provide them horse and armour for defence. Quint.

For jousts, tournaments, and barriers, the glories of them are the chariots wherein challengers make their entry. Bacon.

Whence came all those jousts, tiltings, and tournaments, so much in vogue in those parts? Temple.

He liv'd with all the pomp he could devise,
At tilts and tournaments obtain'd the prize,
But found no favour in his lady's eyes. Denden.

2. Milton uses it simply for encounter;
stroke of battle.

With cruel tournament the squadrons join;
Where cattle pass'd late, now scatter'd lies
With carcasses, and arms, th' intermingl'd field. Milton.

To TOURNIEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To tilt in the tilts.

An elfin born of noble state,

original with taw, tough, toise.] To pull;
to tear; to haul; to drag; whence to use,
or to use, the name of a man's.

As a bear whom angry curs have touse'd,
Having oft shak'd them and clasp'd their hands;
Becomes more fell, and all that him withstands
Treads down and overthrows. Spenser.

She tosses, tumbles, strikes, turns, touse, spurs,
and spralls,
Casting with tousing limbs her holders to the wall. Drayton.

TOW

Take him hence; to th' rock with him: we'll toss you joint by joint, but we will know his purpose. Shakespeare.

The crooked plough, the share, the tow'ring height
Of waggon, and the cart's unwieldy weight;
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden.

All those sublime thoughts which tower above the clouds, and reach as high as heaven itself, take their rise not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered for the contemplation of the mind. Locke.

To'wer-mustard. n. f. [turritis, Lat.]
A plant. Miller.

To'wered. adj. [from tower.] Adorned or defended by towers.

great abundance of gold and pearl. Addison.

Because of old
Thou thyself don't dilt on womankind, admiring
Their shape, their colour, and attractive grace:
None are, thou think'st, but taken with such toys. Milton.

O virtue! virtue! what art thou become,
That men should leave thee for that toy a woman! Dryden.

2. A plaything; a bauble.

To dally thus with death is no fit toy:
Go find some other play-fellows, mine own sweet boy. Spenser.

What a profusion of wealth laid out in coaches, trappings, tables, cabinets, and the like precious toys! Addison.

In Delia's hand this toy is fatal found,
Nor could that faded dart more surely wound. Pope.

We smile at flurries, we despise their joy,
And think their hearts enamour'd of a toy. Young.

3. Matter of no importance.

'Tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shakespeare.

High and noble things I slightly may not tell,
Nor light and idle toys my laces may vainly swell. Dryden.

4. Folly; trifling practice; silly opinion.

The things which so long experience of all ages hath confirmed and made profitable, let us not pretence to condemn as follies and toys, because we sometimes know not the cause and reason of them. Hooker.

While lab'ring oxen, spent with toil and heat,
In their loose traces from the field retreat. Pope.

Twelve young mules,
New to the plough, unpractis'd in the trace. Pope.

To TRACE. v. a. [tracer, French; tracciare, Italian.]

1. To follow by the footsteps, or remaining marks.

I feel thy power to trace the ways
Of highest agents. Milton.

You may trace the deluge quite round the globe in profane history; and every one of these people have a tale to tell concerning the restoration. Burnet.

They do but trace o'er the paths beaten by the ancestors, or comment, critic, or flourish upon them. Temple.

To this haste of the mind, a not due tracing of the arguments to their true foundation is owing.
Locke.

1. Any kind of extended substance.

How'n lades nothing from thy view,
Nor the deep tract of hell. Milton.

2. A region; a quantity of land.

Only there are some tracts which, by high mountains, are barred from air and fresh wind. Raleigh.

Monte Citorio, by Homer called Intula, Arva, is a very high mountain joined to the main land by a narrow tract of earth. Addison.

3. Continuity; any thing protracted, or drawn out to length.

The myrtle flourisheth still; and wonderful it is, that for so long a tract of time she should still con-

Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit,
Improv'd by tract of time, and wing'd ascend Ethereal as we. Milton.

As in tract of speech a dubious word is easily known by the coherence with the rest, and a dubious letter by the whole word; so may a deat person, having competent knowledge of language, by an acute sagacity, by some more evident word dicerned by his eye, know the sense. Holder.

4. Course; manner of process; unless it means, in this place, rather, discourse; explanation.

The tract of every thing
Would, by a good discourse, lose some life
Which action's self was tongue to. Shaksp.

5. It seems to be used by Shakspere for track.

The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright tract of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow. Shaksp.

6. [tractatus, Latin.] A treatise; a small book.

The church clergy at that time writ the best col-able*, French.]

1. Manageable; docile; compliant; obsequious; practicable; governable.

For moderation of those affections growing from the very natural bitterness and gall of adversity, the scripture much allegeth contrary fruit, which affliction likewise hath, whensoever it falleth on them that are tractable, the grace of God's holy spirit concurring therewith. Hooker.

Tractable obedience is a slave
To each incited will. Shakspere.

If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakspere.

As those who are bent to do wickedly will never want tempters to urge them on in an evil course; so those who yield themselves tractable to good motions, will find the spirit of God never ready to encourage them. Tillotson.

If a strict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable, and quietly submit. Locke.

2. Palpable; such as may be handled.

The other measures are of continued quantity visible, and for the most part tractable; whereas time is always transient, neither to be seen nor felt. Holder.

TRACTABLENESS. n. f. [from tractable.]

The state of being tractable; compliance; obsequiousness.

It will be objected, that whatsoever I fancy of children's tractableness, yet many will never apply.
Locke.

TRACTABLY. adv. In a tractable manner;
gently.

TRACTATE. n. f. [tractatus, Latin.] A treatise; a tract; a small book.

Many divines of our own nation, in serious and written tractates of the tabbath, and in their expositions of the fourth commandment, maintain the foreland position. White.

Though philosophical tractates make enumeration of authors, yet are then tedious usually introduced. Brown.

We need no other evidence than Glanville's tractate. Hale.

TRACTILE. adj. [tractus, Latin.] Capable to be drawn out or extended in length;
ductile.

The consistences of bodies are very divers; trapible, tough; flexible, malleable, tractile, or to be drawn forth in length, malleable. Bacon.

TRACTILITY. n. f. [from tractile.] The quality of being tractile.

Silver, whose ductility and tractility are much inferiour to those of gold, was drawn out to to shender a wire, that a single grain amounted to twenty seven feet. Denham.

TRACTION. n. f. [from tractus, Latin.]

The act of drawing; the state of being drawn.

The malleus being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the mallele, and is drawn inwards to bring the tens of that line nearer in proportion as it is curved, and to give a tension to the tympanum. Holder.

TRADE. n. f. [tratta, Italian.]

1. Traffick; commerce; exchange of goods for other goods, or for money.

Whoever commands the sea, commands the trade; whoever commands the trade of the world, commands the riches of the world, and consequently the world itself. Raleigh.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another. Temple.

2. Occupation; particular employment, whether manual or mercantile, distinguished from the liberal arts or learned professions.

TRA

How daisy! half way down
Hangs one that gathers sunfire, dreadful trade!
Shakespeare.

'Till mountebank their loves, and come home be-liev'd
Shakespeare.

Of all the trades in Rome.
Shakespeare.
Fear and piety,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Decline to your confounding contrition. Shaksp
The rude Equicola.

Hunting their sport, and plaudring was their trade.
Dryden.

Fight under him; there's plunder to be had;
A conquest to a very gainful trade.
Dryden.
The pole division that to Mars pertains,
All trades of death, are equal in their gains.
Dryden.

The emperor Pertinax applied himself up his youth to a gainful trade; his father, judging him fit for a better employment, had a mind to turn his education another way; the son was obtinate in pursuing to profitable a trade, a sort of merchandise of wood.
Arbutnot.

3. Instruments of any occupation.

The shepherd bears
His house and household goods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden.

4. Any employment not manual; habitual exercise.

They on the trading flood ply tow'rd the pole.
Milton.

To TRADE. v. a. To sell or exchange in commerce.

They were thy merchants; they traded the persons of men and vessels of brags in thy market.
Faust.

TRADE-WIND. n. s. [trade and wind.] The monsoon; the periodical wind between the tropicks.

Thus to the eastern wealth through storms we go,
But now, the Cape once doubled, fear no more;
A constant trade-wind will securely blow,
And gently lay us on the spicy shore. Dryden.

His were the projects of perpetuum mobilis, and of increasing the trade-wind by vast plantations of reeds. Arbutnot.

Confortable is the trade wind to the equatorial parts, without which life would be both short and grievous. Cheyne.

TRA'DEN, adj. [from trade.] Verfed; prac- tised.

Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villany is not without such chem:
And he long traden in it makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakespeare.

Eyes and ears,
Two traden pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment. Shakespeare.

TRA

TRA'DEFUL. adj. [trade and full.] Com- mercial; busy in traffick.

Ye tradeful merchants, that with weary toll
Do seek most precious things to make your gain,
And both the Indies of their treasure quell,
What needeth you to seek so far in vain? Spenser.

TRA'DER. n. s. [from trade.]

1. One engaged in merchandise or com- merce.

Pilgrims are going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses.
Shakespeare.

Now the victory's won,
We return to our lusts like fortunate traders.
Triumphant with spoils. Dryden.

Many traders will necessitate merchants to trade for less profit, and consequently be more frugal.
Child.

That day traders sum up the accounts of the week. Swift.

soon get all the money of the kingdom into their hands. Swift.

TRA'DESMAN. n. s. [trade and man.] A shopkeeper. A merchant is called a trader, but not a tradesman; and it seems distinguished in Shakespeare from a man that labours with his hands.

I live by the awl, I meddle with no tradesmen's matters. Shakespeare.

They rather had beheld Diffident numbers peff'ring streets; than see
Our tradesmen lingering in their shops, and going About their functions. Shakespeare.

Order a trade thither and thence for us some merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind them. Bacon.

Tradesmen might conjecture what doings they were like to have in their respective dealings.

Our grand
M. Jourdain would not be thought a tradesman, but ordered some silk to be measured out to his partner's friends; now I give up my shop. Prior.

From a plain tradesman with a shop, he is now grown a very rich country gentleman. Arbutnot.

Domesticks in a gentleman's family have more opportunities of improving their minds, than the ordinary tradesmen. Swift.

Boastful and rough, your first son is a squire;
The next a tradesman, weak, and much a liar. Pope.

Penitus was a busy nothful tradesman, very prosperous in his dealings, but died in the thirty-fifth year of his age. Law.

TRADITION. n. s. [tradition, Fr. traditio, Latin.]

1. The act or practice of delivering ac- counts from mouth to mouth without written memorials; communication from age to age.

To learn it we have tradition; namely, that so we believe, because both we from our predecessors, and they from theirs, have so received. Hooker.

2. Any thing delivered orally from age to age.

They the truth
With superstitions and traditions tint,
Left only in those written records pure. Milton.

It is well known to have been a general tradition amongst these nations, that the world was made,
and had a beginning. Wilkins.

Our old solemnities
From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;
But, sav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
Their grateful honour to the god of day. Pope.

TRADITIONAL. adj. [from tradition.]

1. Delivered by tradition; descending by oral communication; transmitted by the foregoing to the following age.

Whence may we have the infallible tradition sent to mankind, it not from the word of their ancestors?

If there be any difference in natural parts, it dren born from wealthy parents, the same traditional both and luxury which render their body weak, perhaps refining their spirits. Swift.

2. Obervant of traditions, or idle rites.
Not used, nor proper.
God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of sanctuary!

You are too senseless obtinate, my lord,
Too ceremonious and traditional. Shakespeare.

TRADITIONALLY. adv. [from tradi- tional.]

1. By transmission from age to age.

There is another channel wherein this doctrine is traditionally derived from St. John, namely, from the clergy of Asia. Parnell.

2. From tradition without evidence of written memorials.

It crosseth the proverb, and Rome might well be built in a day, if that were true which is traditionally related by Strabo, that the great cities Anchala and Tarsus were built by Sardanapalus both in one day. Bacon.

TRADITIONARY. adj. [from tradition]

Delivered by tradition; transmissive, handed down from age to age.

Suppose the same traditionary strain
Of rigid manners in the house remain,
Inveterate truth, an old plain Sabine's heart.

Oral tradition is more uncertain, especially if we may take that to be the traditionary form of texts of scripture. Tilley.

The fame of our Saviour, which in so few years had gone through the whole earth, was confirmed and perpetuated by such records as would preferre the traditionary account of him to after-ages. Adams.

TRADITIVE. adj. [traditive, French, from trado, Latin.] Transmitted or transmissi- ble from age to age.

Suppose we on things traditive divide,
And both appeal to scripture to decide. Dryden.

To TRADUCE. v. a. [traduco, Latin; tra- duire, French.]

1. To censure; to condemn; to represent as blamable; to calumniate; to decry.

The best stratagem that Satan hath, who knoweth his kingdom to be no one way more shaken by the public devout prayers of God's church, by traducing the form and manner of them, bringing them into contempt, and so slack the force
all men's devotion towards them. Hos.

Those particular ceremonies which they pretend to be so scandalous, we shall more thoroughly see when other things also traduced in the public ac-ties of the church are, together with these, to be touched. Hos.

Whilst calumny has such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth: as long as men are malicious and designing, they will be traducing.

Government of the Tongue
From that preface he took his hint; though he had the business not to acknowledge his benefactor, but instead of it to traduce me in libel. Dry-

2. To propagate; to increase or continue by deriving one from another.

None are so gross as to contend for this,
That souls from bodies may traduced be;
Between whose natures no proportion is.
When root and branch in nature full agree. Dan.

From these only the race of perfect animals were propagated and traduced over the earth. Hos.

Some believe the soul is made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant: whether it is immediately created or traduced, hath been a great ball of contention to the latter ages. Glan.

TRADUCEMENT. n. s. [from traduce.]

Censure; obloquy.

Rome must know
The value of her own: 'twere a concealment

Woe that is the end of all things, and the end of all things is death. Shakespeare.

TRA'DUCE. n. f. [from traduce.] A false reporter; a calumniator. One who derives.

TRA'DUCE. adj. [from traduce.] Such as may be derived.

Though oral tradition might be a competent discoverer of the original of a kingdom, yet such a tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws, because they are of a complex nature, and therefore not orally reducible to a great distance of ages. Hale.

TRA'DITION. n. f. [from traduce.]

1. Derivation from one of the same kind; propagation.

The persons of Genesis accuse their adversaries of ascribing the attributes of God; and the officers of creation impeach them of violence to the nature of things. Glanville.

If by tradition came thy mind, Our wonder is the less to find

A soul so charming from a flock to good;

The father was transfus'd into thy blood. Dryden.

2. Tradition; transmission from one to another.

Teaching traditional communication and tradition of truths connatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of them have had the help of that derivation. Hale.

3. Conveyance; act of transferring.

Since America is divided on every side by considerable seas, and no passage known by land, the tradition of brutes could only be by shipping; though this was a method used for the tradition of useful cattle from hence thither, yet it is not credible that bears and lions should have so much use of their transportation. Hale.

Tradition.

The reports and fables have an agreement with figures in rhetoric of repetition and tradition. Bacon.

TRAFFICK. n. f. [traficque, Fr. traffico, Italian.]

Of fair fallacious looks, venereal trains.
Soft'n'd with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton.

Now to my charms
And to my wily trains! I shall ere long
Be well stock'd with as fair a herd as gras'd
About my mother Circe. Milton.

The practice begins of crafty men upon the simple and good; these easily follow and are caught, while the others lay trains and pursue a game. Temple.

2. The tail of a bird.
Costly followers are not to be liked, lest while a man makes his train longer he makes his wings shorter. Bacon.

Contracting their body, and being forced to draw in their fore parts to establish the hinder in the elevation of the train, if the fore parts do part and incline to the ground, the hinder grow too weak, and suffer the train to fall. Brown.

The bird guideth her body with her train, and the ship is steered with the rudder. Hakewill.
Th' other, whose gay train
Adorns him colour'd with the florid hue
Of rainbows and sunny eyes. Milton.

The train steers their flights, and turns their bod-

we shall find our ideas always pushing in train, one going and another coming, without intermission. Locke.

They laboured in vain so far to reach the apostle's meaning, all along in the train of what he said. Locke.

Some truths result from any ideas, as soon as the mind puts them into propositions; other truths require a train of ideas placed in order, a due comparing of them, and deductions made with attention. Locke.

What wouldst thou have me do? consider well
The train of ills our love would draw behind it. Addison.

The author of your beings can by a glance of the eye, or a word speaking, enlighten your mind, and conduct you to a train of happy sentiments. Watts.

5. Process; method; state of procedure.
If things were once in this train, if virtue were established as necessary to reputation, and vice not only loaded with infamy, but made the infallible ruin of all men's pretensions, our duty would take root in our nature. Swift.

6. A retinue; a number of followers or attendants.
My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That in the most exact regard support
The worship of their names. Shakspere.

What is loose love? a transient gulf,
A vapour fed from wild desire. Pope.

TRANSIENTLY. adv. [from transient.] In passage; with a short passage; not with continuance.

I touch here but transiently, without any strict method, on some few of those many rules of imitating nature which Aristotle drew from Homer.
Dryden.

TRANSIENTNESS. n. f. [from transient.]
Shortness of continuance; speedy passage.

It were to be wished that all words of this sort,
as they resemble the wind in fury and impetuosiness, so they might do also in transientness and sudden expiration. Decay of Pity.

TRANSILIENCY. } n. f. [from transiliv, TRANSILIENCY. } Latin.] Leap from thing to thing.

By an unadvised transiliency from the effect to the remotest cause, we observe not the connection, through the interposal of more immediate causalities.
Glanville.

TRANSIT. n. f. [transitus, Latin.] In astronomy, the passing of any planet just by or under any fixed star; or of the moon covering or moving close by any other planet. Harris.

TRANSITION. n. f. [transitio, Latin.]

1. Removal; passage from one to another.
Heat and cold have a virtual transition without communication of substance, but moisture not.
Bacon.

As for the mutation of sexes, and transition into one another, we cannot deny it in hares, it being observable in man. Brown.

I have given some intimations of the changes which happen in the interior parts of the earth, I mean the transitions and removes of metals and minerals there. Woodward.

2. Change; mode of change.

The spots are of the same colour throughout,
there being an immediate transition from white to black, and not declining gradually, and mixing as they approach. Woodward.

You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so easy a transition, and so laudable a behaviour. Pope.

As once inclos'd in woman's beautiful mould;
Thence, by a soft transition we repair
From earthly vehicles to those of air. Pope.

3. [transition, French.] Passage in writing or conversation from one subject to another.

He with transition sweet new speech resumes. Milton.

Covetousness was none of his faults, but described as a veil over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness, to which he makes a transition. Dryden.

TRANSITIVE. adj. [transitivus, Latin.]

1. Having the power of passing.

One cause of cold is the contact of cold bodies;
for cold is active and transitive into bodies adjacent,
as well as heat. Bacon.

TRANSLATOR. n. s. [translatur, old Fr.
from translat.] One that turns any thing into another language.

A new and nobler way thou dost pursue,
To make translations and translators too.

Denham.

No translation our own country ever yet produced, both come up to that of the Old and New Testament; and I am persuaded, that the transla- tors of the bible were masters of an English stile much fitter for that work than any we see in our present writings, the which is owing to the simplicity that runs through the whole.

Swift.

TRANSLATORY. n. s. [from translat.]
Transferring.

The translatory is a lie that transfers the merits of a man's good action to another more deserving.

Arbutnot.

TRANSLOCATION. n. s. [trans and locus, Latin.] Removal of things reciprocally to each other's places.

There happened certain translocations at the deluge, the matter constituting animal and vegetable substances being dissolved, and mineral matter substituted in its place, and thereby like translocation of metals in some springs.

Woodward.

TRANSLUCENCY. n. s. [from translucent.]
Diaphaneity; transparency.

Lumps of rock crystal heated red hot, then quenched in fair water, exchanged their translu-

Am not I old Sly's son, by birth a pedlar, by education a card-maker, by transmutation a bear-herd?

Shakespeare.

The transmutation of plants one into another, is inter magnalia naturæ, for the transmutation of species is, in the vulgar philosophy, pronounced impossible; but seeing there appear some manifest instances of it, the opinion of impossibility is to be rejected, and the means thereof to be found out.

Bacon.

The conversion into a body merely new, and which was not before, as silver to gold, or iron to copper, is better called, for distinction sake, trans- mutation.

Bacon.

The changing of bodies into light, and light into bodies, is very conformable to the course of nature, which seems delighted with transmutations. Water, which is a very fluid and delicate salt, the changes by heat into vapour, which is a sort of air, and by cold into ice, which is a hard, pellucid, brittle, fusible stone; and this stone returns into water by heat, and vapour returns into water by cold.

Newton.

The supposed change of worms into flies is no real transmutation; but most of those members, which

TREASON, n. f. [trahison, Fr.] An offence committed against the dignity and majesty of the commonwealth.

It is divided into high treason and petit treason.
High treason is an offence against the security of the commonwealth, or of the king's majesty, whether by imagination, word, or deed; as to compass or imagine treason, or the death of the prince, or the queen consort, or his son and heir-apparent;

or to deflower the king's wife, or his eldest daughter unmarried, or his eldest son's wife; or levy war against the king in his realm, or to adhere to his enemies by aiding them, or to counterfeit the king's great seal, privy seal, or money; or knowingly to bring false money into this realm counterfeited like the money of England, and to utter the same; or to kill the king's chancellor, treasurer, justice of the one bench or of the other; justices in eyre, justices of assize, justices of oyer and terminer, when in their place and doing their duty; or forging the king's seal manual, or privy signet; or diminishing or im-paring the current money; and in such treason, a man forfeits his lands and goods to the king; and it is called treason paramount. Petit treason is when a servant kills his master, a wife her husband, a clerk secular or religious kills his prelate: this treason gives forfeiture to every lord within his own fee: both treasons are capital. Cowell.

He made the overture of thy treasons to us. Shakespeare.

Mau disobeying,
Disloyal breaks his fealty, and sins
Against the high supremacy of heaven:

To expiate his treason hath nought left.
This being a treason against God, by a commerce with his enemy. Milton.

Athaliah cried, Treason, treason. 2 Kings.

TREASONABLE, adj. [from treason.]

TREATABLE. adj. [traitable, Fr.] Moderate; not violent.

A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of treatable dissolution, than be suddenly cut off in a moment, rather to be taken than snatched away. Hooker.

The heats or the colds of seasons are less treatable than with us. Temple.

VOL. II.

TRE

TREATISE. n. f. [tractatus, Latin.] Discourse; written tractate.

The time has been, my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir
As life were in't. Shakespeare.

Besides the rules given in this treatise to make a perfect judgment of good pictures, there is required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden.

TREATMENT. n. f. [traitement, French.]

Usage; manner of using, good or bad.

Scarce an humour or character which they have not used; all comes applied to us; and were they to entertain this age, they could not now make such plentiful treatment. Dryden.

Accept such treatment as a swain affords. Pope.

Miller.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory
With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air.

Who can bid the tree unfix his earth-bound root,

It is pleasant to look upon a tree in summer covered with green leaves, decked with blossoms, or laden with fruit, and eating a pleasant shade: but to consider how this tree sprung from a little seed, how nature shaped and fed it till it came to this greatness, is a more rational pleasure. Burnet.

Trees shoot up in one great stem, and at a good distance from the earth spread into branches: thus gambelones are shrubs, and oaks are trees. Locke.

2. Any thing branched out.

Vain are their hopes who fancy to inherit,
By trees of pedigree, or time or merit;
Though plodding heralds through each branch way trace

Old captains and delators of their race. Dryden.

turners. Miller.

TREE primrose. n. f. A plant.

TREEN. The old plural of tree.

Well run greenhood, got between
Under the sun-bug he was seen;
Lowling low like a forlorn green,
He knows his tackle and his train. Ben Jonson.

TREEN. adj. Wooden; made of wood.
Obsolete.

Sir Thomas Rookby being controlled for fast suffering himself to be served in teen cups, answered, these homely cups pay truly for that they contain. I had rather drink out of teen, and pay gold and silver, than drink out of gold and silver, and make wooden payments. Camden.

TREFOIL. n. f. [trifolium, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

THE

Hope, by the ancients, was drawn in the form of a sweet and beautiful child standing upon tipsies, and a trefoil or three-leaved grass in her hand.

Some sow trefoil or rye-grass with their clover.

TREILLAGE. n. f. [French.] A contexture of pales to support espaliers, making a distinct inclosure of any part of a garden.

There are so many kinds of gardening as of poetry: makers of flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonneteers; contrivers of bowers, grottos, treillages, and cascades, are romance writers.

TREILLIS. n. f. [French.] A structure of iron, wood, or other, the parts crossing each other like a lattice.

TO TREMBLE. v. n. [trembler, French; trempe, Latin.]

1. To shake as with fear or cold; to shiver; to quake; to shudder.

My compassionate heart
Will not permit my eyes once to behold
The thing, whereat it trembles by surprise.

And power thou tremblest at.

When he heard the king, he fell into such a trembling that he could hardly speak.

He shook the sacred honours of his head,
With terror trembled heavy's bubbling bill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill.

Ye pow'rs, revenge your violated altars,
That they who with unballo'd hands approach
May tremble.

2. To quiver; to totter.

Sinai's grey top shall tremble.

We cannot imagine a mass of water to have stood upon the middle of the earth like one great drop, or a trembling jelly, and all the places about it dry.

3. To quaver; to shake as a sound.

Winds make a noise unequally, and sometimes, when vehement, tremble at the height of their blast.

TREMBLINGLY. adv. [from trembling.] So as to shake or quiver.

And on the sudden dropt.

Say, what the use, were finer optics giv'n,
To inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n:
Or touch, if tremblingly alive all o'er,
To smart and agonize at every pore?

TREMENDOUS. adj. [tremendus, Latin.]

Dreadful; horrible; astonishingly terrible.

There stands an altar where the priest celebrates
Some mysteries sacred and tremendous.

Each hand tremendous with a brazen spear.

TREMOUR. n. f. [tremor, Latin.]

1. The state of trembling.

He fell into an universal tremour of all his joints,
That when going his legs trembled under him.

By its syrtick and stimulating quality it affects
The nerves, occasioning tremours.

2. Quivering or vibratory motion.

These stars do not twinkle when viewed through Telescopes which have large apertures: for the rays of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture tremble each of them apart, and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremours, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye.

TREMULOUS. adj. [tremulus, Latin.]

1. Trembling; fearful.

The tender tremulous christian is easily distracted and amazed by them.

2. Quivering; vibratory.

He owned to have some kind of little discompo-

TRE

for where there was nothing to determine him, the balance by hanging even became tremulous.

As thus th' effulgence tremulous I drink,
The lambent lightnings shoot across the sky.

TREMULOUSNESS. n. f. [from tremulous.]

The state of quivering.

TREN. n. f. A fish spear.

TO TRENCH. v. a. [trancher, Fr.]

1. To cut.

Safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched gaffs on his head.

2. To cut or dig into pits or ditches.

Trench the ground, and make it ready for the spring.

First draw thy faulchion, and on ev'ry side
Trench the black earth a culit long and wide.

3. To fortify by earth thrown up.

Pioneers with spades and pickax arm'd,
Fore-run the royal camp to trench a field.

TRENCH. n. f. [tranche, Fr.]

1. A pit or ditch.

And with a trench enclose the fruitful field.

2. Earth thrown up to defend soldiers in their approach to a town, or to guard a camp.

The citizens of Corioli have issued forth
And given to Lartius and to Marcus battle:

I saw our party to the trenches driven,
And then I came away.

TRENCHANT. adj. [trenchant, Fr.] Cutting; sharp.

He fiercely took his trenchant blade in hand,
With which he struck so furious and so fell,
That nothing seem'd the puillance could withstand.

Against a vanquish'd foe, their swords
Were sharp and trenchant, not their words.

TRENCHER. n. f. [from trench; trenchoir,
French.]

1. A piece of wood on which meat is cut at table.

No more
I'll scrape trencher, nor wash dish.

2. The table.

Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board
When I have feasted!

3. Food; pleasures of the table.

It could be no ordinary declension of nature that could bring some men, after an ingenious education, to place their summum bonum upon their trenchers, and their utmost felicity in wine.

TRENCHERFLY. n. f. [trencher and fly.]
One that haunts tables; a parasite.

He found all people came to him promiscuously, and he tried which of them were friends, and which only trencherflies and spungers.

TRE

TRENCHERMAN. n. f. [trencher and man.]

1. A cook. Obsolete.

Palladius assured him, that he had already been more fed to his liking than he could be by the fullest trenchermen of Media.

2. A feeder; an eater.

You had muddy victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he's a very valiant trencher man; he hath an excellent stomach.

TRENCHERMATE. n. f. [trencher and mate.]
A table companion; a parasite.

Because that judicious learning of the ancient ages doth not in this case serve the turn, these trenchermates frame to themselves a way more pleasant; a new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery, an art of contradiction by way of scorn.

TO TREND. v. n. To tend; to lie in any particular direction. It seems a corruption of tend.

The scouts to several parts divide their way,
To learn the natives names, their towns, explore
The customs and trendings of the crooked shore.

TRENDLE. n. f. [trenbel, Saxon.] Any thing turned round. Now improperly written trundle.

TRENTAIS. n. f. [treinte, Fr.]

Trentais or trigintaits were a number of maffes, to the tale of thirty, laid on the same account,
according to a certain order instituted by St.
Gregory.

TREPAN. n. f. [trepan, Fr.]

1. An instrument by which chirurgeons cut out round pieces of the skull.

2. A snare; a stratagem by which any one is ensnared. [Of this signification Skinner assigns for the reason, that some English ships in queen Elizabeth's reign being invited, with great show of friendship, into Trapani, a part of Sicily, were there detained.]

But what a thoughtless animal is man,
How very active in his own trepan!

Can there be any thing of friendship in bars,
hooks, and trepans?

During the commotion of the blood and spirit in which passion consists, whatsoever is offered the imagination in favour of it, tends only to negative the reason: it is indeed a real trepan upon feeding it with colours and appearances instead of arguments.

TO TREPAN. v. a. [from the noun; tre-paner, French.]

1. To perforate with the trepan.

A putrid matter flowed forth her nostrils, of the same smell with that in trepanning the bone.

Few recovered of those that were trepanned.

2. To catch; to ensnare.

They trepan'd the state, and fac'd it down
With plots and projects of our own.

Those are but trepanned who are called to govern, being invested with authority but bereav'd of power, which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magnificent way of being ridiculous.

TREPINE. n. f. A small trepan; a smaller instrument of perforation managed by one hand.

I shew'd a trepan and trephine, and gave them liberty to try both upon a skull.

TREPIDATION. n. f. [trepidatio, Lat.]

1. The state of trembling, or quivering.

The bow tortures the string continually, and holdeth it in a continual trepidation.

All objects of the senses which are very offensive, cause the spirits to retire; upon which the parts in some degree, are destitute; and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror.

Moving of th' earth brings harms and tears,
Men reckon what it did and meant;

But repudiation of the spheres,
though greater far, is innocent.
They pass the planets for'n, and pass the fix'd, and that crystalline sphere whose balance weighs the repudiation talk'd, and that first mov'd.

Donne.

State of terror.

Because the whole kingdom flood in a zealous repudiation of the absence of such a prince, I have seen the more desirous to research the several passages of the journey.

Wotton.

His first action of note was in the battle of Le-santo; where the success of that great day, in such repudiation of the state, made every man meritorious.

Wotton.

Hurry; confused haste.

TRESPASS, v. n. [trespasser, Fr.]

To transgress; to offend.

If they shall confess their trespass which they trespassed against me, I will remember my covenant.

Lection.

They not only contradict the general design and particular expresse of the gospel, but trespass against all logic.

Norris.

To enter unlawfully on another's ground.

Their morals and economy

Most perfectly they made agree:

Each virtue kept its proper bound,

Nor trespass'd on the other's ground.

Prior.

TRESPASS, n. f. [trespas, French.]

1. Transgression; offence.

Your purpose'd low correction

Is such, as safest and the meanest wretches

For pilferings, and most common trespass,

Are punish'd with.

Shakespeare.

Will God incense his ire

For such a petty trespass?

Milton.

2. Unlawful entrance on another's ground.

TRESPASSER, n. f. [from trespass.]

1. An offender; a transgressor.

2. One who enters unlawfully on another's

ground.

If I come upon another's ground without his licence, or the licence of the law, I am a trespasser, for which the owner may have an action of trespass against me.

Walton.

TRESSED, adj. [from treffe, Fr.] Knotted or curled.

Nor this nor that so much doth make me mourn,
But for the lad, whom long I lov'd to dear,
Now loves a lass that all his love doth scorn,
He plunged in pain his treffed locks doth tear.

Speiser.

TRESSES, n. f. without a singular. [treffe, Fr. treccia, Ital.] A knot or curl of hair.

Hung be the heav'ns with black, yield day to night!
Comets, importing change of times and fates,
Braidst their crystal resses in the sky! Shakespeare

Her swelling breast

Naked, met his under the flowing gold

Of her loose resses hid.

Milton.

Adam had wove

Of choicest flow'rs a garland to adorn

Her resses, and her rural labours crown.

Milton.

Fair resses man's imperial race ensnare,

And beauty draws us with a single hair.

Pope.

Then cease, bright nymph! to mourn the ravish'd

hair,
Which adds new glory to the shining sphere!

Not all the resses that fair hair can boast

Shall draw such envy as the lock you lost.

Pope.

TRETTLE, n. f. [treteau, French.]

1. The frame of a table.

2. A moveable form by which any thing is supported.

TRET, n. f. [probably from tritius, Lat.]

An allowance made by merchants to retailers, which is four pounds in every hundred weight, and four pounds for wale or refuse of a commodity.

Bailey.

TRETHINGS, n. f. [trethingi, low Latin,

from trethu, Welsh, to tax.] Taxes;
imposts.

TREVRT, n. f. [Treppez, Saxon; trepied, Fr.] Any thing that stands on three legs:
as, a stool.

TREY, n. f. [tres, Lat. trois, Fr.] A three at cards.

White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.

—Honey, milk and sugar; there is three.

—Nay then, two treys; metheglin, wort, and malmsey.

Shakespeare.

TRIABLE, adj. [from try.]

1. Possible to be experimented; capable of trial.

For the more easy understanding of the experiments triable by our engine, I minutated that notion, by which all of them will prove explicable.

Boyle.

2. Such as may be judicially examined.

No one should be admitted to a bishop's chancellorship without good knowledge in the civil and canon laws, since divers causes triable in the spiritual court are of weight.

Ayliffe.

TRIAD, n. f. [trias, Lat. triade, Fr.]

Three united.

TRIAL, n. f. [from try.]

1. Test; examination.

With trial fire touch me his finger end;

If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,

And turn him to no pain; but if he start,

It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

Shakespeare.

2. Experiment; act of examining by experience.

I leave him to your gracious acceptance,

Whole trial shall better publish his commendation.

Shakespeare.

Skilful gardeners make trial of the seeds by putting them into water gently boiled; and if good, they will sprout within half an hour.

Bacon.

There is a mixed kind of evidence relating both to the senses and understanding, depending upon our own observation and repeated trials of the effects and events of actions or things, called experience.

Wilkins.

3. Experience; experimental knowledge.

Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourges.

Hebrews.

4. Judicial examination.

Trial is used in law for the examination of all causes, civil or criminal, according to the laws of our realm: the trial is the issue, which is tried upon the indictment, not the indictment itself.

Cowell.

He hath resisted law

And therefore law shall scorn him further trial

Than the severity of publick power.

Shakespeare.

A canon of the Jews required, in all suits and judicial trials betwixt rich and poor, that either each should stand, or both should sit.

Kettlerell.

They shall come upon their trial, have all their actions strictly examined.

Nelson.

5. Temptation; test of virtue.

Left our trial, when least sought,

May find us both perhaps far less prepar'd,

The willing I go.

Milton.

No such company as them thou saw'st Intended thee; for trial only brought,

To see how thou couldst judge of fit and meet.

Milton.

Every station is exposed to some trials, either temptations that provoke our appetites, or disquiet our fears.

Rogers.

6. State of being tried.

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.

—It is to be all made of sighs and tears;

It is to be made all of faith and fervour;

All humbleness, all patience and impatience;

All purity, all trial, all observance.

Shakespeare.

TRIANGLE, n. f. [triangle, Fr. triangulum, Lat.] A figure of three angles.

The three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones.

Locke.

TRIANGULAR, adj. [triangularis, Lat.]

Having three angles.

The frame thereof seem'd partly circular.

And part triangular; O work divine!

These two the first and last proportions are.

Though a round figure be most capacious for the honey, and convenient for the bee; yet did she not chuse that, because there must have been tri- angular spaces left void.

Ray.

TRINE, n. f. [tribus, Lat. from tres,

British; b and v being labials of pro-nuncious use in the ancient British words: treu from tir es, his lands, is supposed by Rowland to be Celtick, and used before the Romans had any thing to do with the British government. This notion will not be much recommended,

when it is told, that he derives centuria

from treu, supposing it to be the same with our centre, importing a hundred

*treu*s or tribes.]

1. A distinct body of the people as divided by family or fortune, or any other cha-racteristick.

I ha' been writing all this night unto all the tribes

And centuries for their voices, to help Catiline

In his election.

Ben Jonson.

If the heads of the tribes can be taken off, and the mild multitude will see their error, such extent of mercy is honourable.

Bacon.

Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank

Your tribes, and water from the ambrosial fount?

Milton.

Teach straggling mountaineers, for publick good,

To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood,

Houses to build.

Tate.

I congratulate my country upon the increase of this happy tribe of men, since, by the present parliament, the race of freeholders is spreading into the remotest corners.

Addison.

2. It is often used in contempt.

Folly and vice are easy to describe,

The common subjects of our scribbling tribe.

Lycammon.

TRI-BLET or TRI-BULET, n. f. A gold smith's tool for making rings.

Ainsw.

TRIBULATION, n. f. [tribulation, Fr.]

Persecution; distress; vexation; disturbance of life.

Tribulation being present causeth sorrow, and being imminent breedeth fear.

Hooker.

The just shall dwell.

And, after all their tribulations long,

See golden days fruitful of golden deeds.

Milton.

Death becomes

His final remedy; and after life

Ty'd in sharp tribulation, and refin'd

By faith, and faithful works.

Milton.

Our church taught us to pray, that God, would, not only in all time of our tribulation, but in all time of our wealth, deliver us.

Atterbury.

TRIEUNAL, n. f. [tribunal, Latin and

French.]

1. The seat of a judge.

I' th' market place, on a tribunal silver'd,

Cleopatra and heretofore in chairs of gold

Were publicly enthron'd.

Shakespeare.

He fees the room

Where the whole nation does for justice come,

Under whose large roof flourishes the gown,

And judges grave on high tribunals town.

Waller.

There is a necessity of standing at his tribunal, who is infinitely wise and just.

Grew.

He, who for our takes stood before an earthly tribunal, might therefore be consulted judge of the whole world.

Nelson.

2. A court of justice.

Summoning me, angels to proclaim

Thy dread tribunal.

Milton.

TRI-BUNE, n. f. [tribun, tribunus, Lat.]

1. An officer of Rome chosen by the people.

These are the tribunes of the people,

The tongues o' th' common mouth: I do despise

Shakespeare.

2. The commander of a Roman legion.

TRIBUNITIAL. } adj. [tribunitius, Lat.] TRIBUNITIOUS. } Suiing a tribune; relating to a tribune.

Let them not come in multitudes, or in a tribunitious manner; for that is to clamour counsels, not to inform. Bacon.

Oh happy ages of our ancestors!
 Beneath the kings and tribunitial powers,
 One jail did all their criminals restrain. Dryden.

TRIBUTARY. adj. [tributaire, Fr. tributa-rius, Latin.]

1. Paying tribute as an acknowledgment of submission to a master.

Thenceforth this land was tributary made Ambitious Rome, and did their rule obey,
 Till Arthur all that reckoning did defray:
 Yet oft the Briton kings against them strongly twy'd. Spenser.

Whilft Malvern, king of hills, fair Sever overlooks,
 Attended on in state with tributary brooks. Drayton.

The two great empires of the world I know;
 And since the earth none larger does afford,
 This Charles is some poor tributary lord. Dryden.

Around his throne the sea-horn brothers flood,
 That swell with tributary urns his flood. Pope.

2. Subject; subordinate.

These he, to grace his tributary gods,
 By course commits to feveral government,
 And gives them leave to wear their sapphire crowns,
 And wield their little tridents. Milton.

O'er Judah's king ten thousand tyrants reign,
 Legions of lust, and various pow'rs of ill
 Insult the master's tributary will. Prior.

3. Paid in tribute.

Nor flatter'd tunes these tributary lays. Concannon.

TRIBUTARY. n. f. [from tribute.] One who pays a stated sum in acknowleg-ment of subjection.

All the people therein shall be tributaries unto thee, and serve thee. Deuteronomy.

The Irish lords did only promise to become tributaries to king Henry the second: and such as only pay tribute are not properly subjects, but vassalage. Davies.

TRIBUTE. n. f. [tribut, Fr. tributum, Lat.] Payment made in acknowleg-ment; subjection.

They that received tribute money said, Doth not your master pay tribute? Matthew.

As tribute warmth and light. Milton.

To acknowledge thus, was all he did exact;
 Small tribute, where the will to pay was act. Dryden.

TRICK. n. f. [I believe this word comes from trait, Fr. corrupted by pronunciation.]
 A short time; an instant; a stroke.

If they get never so great spoil at any time, the same they waste in a trice, as naturally delighting in spoil, though it do themselves no good. Spenser.

Just in the nick the cook knock'd thrice,
 And all the waiters in a trice. Milton.

His summons did obey:
 Each serving man with dith in hand
 March'd boldly up like our train'd band,
 Presented, and away. Suckling.

We could raise it uples dark and nice,
 And after solve them in a trice. Hudibras.

So when the war had rais'd a storm,
 I've seen a snake in human form,
 All stain'd with infamy and vice,
 Leap from the dunghill in a trice. Swift.

It seems incredible at first, that all the blood in our bodies should circulate in a trice, in a very few minutes; but it would be more surprising if we knew the short periods of the great circulation of water. Bentley.

A man shall make his fortune in a trice,
 If blest with plant, though but slender sense,
 Foreign modesty, and real impudence. Young.

TRICHOTOMY. n. f. [τρίχλωμι.] Division into three parts.

Some disturb the order of nature by dichotomies, trichotomies, seven, twelve: let the subject, with the design you have in view, determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watia.

TRICK. n. f. [treck, Dutch.]

1. A fly fraud.

Sir Thomas More said, that a trick of law had no less power than the wheel of fortune, to lift men up, or cast them down. Raleigh.

A bantering droll took a journey to Delphos, to try if he could put a trick upon Apollo L'Estrange.

Such a one thinks to find some shelter in my friendship, and I betray him: he comes to me for counsel, and I shew him a trick. South.

He swore by Styx,
 Whate'er she would desire, to grant;
 But wile Archela knew his tricks. Swift.

2. A dexterous artifice.

Gather the lowest, and leaving the top,
 Shall teach thee a trick for to double thy crop. Tusser.

And now, as oft in some dilemper'd state,
 On one nice trick depends the gen'ral fate. Pope.

3. A vitious practice.

Suspicion shall be stuck full of eyes:
 For treason is but trusted like a fox,
 Who ne'er so tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up,
 Will have a wild trick of his ancessors. Shakespeare.

I entertain you with somewhat more worthy than the stale exploded trick of fulsome panegyrics. Dryden.

Some friends to vice pretend,
 That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden.

4. A juggle; an antick; any thing done to cheat jocosely, or to divert.

A rev'rend prelate stopp'd his coach and fix,
 To laugh a little at our Andrew's tricks. Prior.

5. An unexpected effect.

So fellst thou who brake their sleep,
 To take the one the other, by some chance,
 Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakespeare.

6. A practice; a manner; a habit. Not in use.

I spoke it but according to the trick: if you'll hang me, you may. Shakespeare.

The trick of that voice I well remember. Shakespeare.

Behold,
 Although the print be little, the whole matter
 And copy of the father: eye, nose, lip,
 The trick of 's frown, his forehead. Shakespeare.

7. A number of cards laid regularly up in play: as, a trick of cards.

To TRICK. v. a. [from the noun; tricker,
 French.]

1. To cheat; to impose on; to defraud.

It is impossible that the whole world should thus conspire to cheat themselves, to put a delusion on mankind, and trick themselves into belief. Stephens.

2. To dress; to decorate; to adorn; properly, to knot. [Trica, in low Latin, signifies a knot of hair; treccia, Italian: hence trace. Matt. Westmonasteriensis says of Godiva of Coventry, that she rode tricas capitis & crines dissolvens.]

And trick them up in knotted curls anew. Drayton.

They turned the imposture upon the king, and gave out, that to defeat the true inheritor he had tricked up a boy in the likeness of Edward Plantagegenet. Bacon.

Horridly tricked

With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,
 Bak'd and impasted with the parching fires. Shakespeare.

This pillar is but a medley, or a mass of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind by stealth;
 and though the most richly tricked, yet the poorest
 in this, that he is a borrower of all his beauty. Wotton.

Their heads are tricks with tassels and flowers. Sundey.

Woe! Heberden, weep no more
 For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead:
 Sunk though he be beneath the wat'ry floor,
 So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,
 And yet some repairs his drooping head,
 And ticks his beams, and with new-spangled ore
 Flames in the forehead of the morning sky. Milton.

Not trick'd and froun'd as he was wont
 With the Atack boy to hunt. Milton.

A daw that had a mind to be sparkish, tricked himself up with all the gay feathers he could mu-ter. L'Estrange.

Love is an airy good opinion makes,
 That tricks and dresses up the gaudy dream. Dryden.

People lavish it profusely in tricking up their children in fine cloaths, and yet leave their minds lacke. Lacke.

3. To perform with a light touch; though it may here mean to dress.

Come, the colours and the ground prepare.
 Dip in the rainbow, trick her off in air;
 Chase a firm cloud before it fall, and in it
 Catch ere she change the Cynthia of this minute. Pope.

To TRICK. v. n. To live by fraud.

Thus they jog on, still tricking, never throwing,
 And murthering plays, which still they call reviving. Dryden.

TRICKER. n. f. [This is often written trigger; I know not which is right.]
 The catch which being pulled disengages the cock of the gun, that it may give fire.

Pulling aside the tricker we observed, that the force of the spring of the lock was not less abated by the absence of the air. Boyle.

As a goose
 In death contracts his talons close;
 So did the knight, and with one claw
 The tricker of his pistol draw. Hudibras.

TRICKING. v. n. [from trick.] Dress, ornament.

Get us properties and tricking for our games. Shakespeare.

TRICKISH. adj. [from trick.] Knavishly artful; fraudulently cunning; mischerously subtle.

All he says is in a loose, slippery, and trick-way of reasoning. Pope.

To TRICKLE. v. n. [Of this word I find no etymology that seems well authorized or probable.] To fall in drops; to run in a slender stream.

He, prick'd with pride,
 Forth spurred fast, adown his courier's side
 The red blood trickling, stain'd the way. Spenser.

Faith beside there trickled softly down
 A gentle stream, whose murmur ring wave did play
 Amongst the pumy stones, and made a fountain
 To lull him fast asleep that by it lay. Spenser.

Some noises help sleep; as, the blowing of the wind, and trickling of water, as moving in the fountains a gentle attention, which filled the delicious motion. Bacon.

He weakened by the trickling of his blood. Wynter.

Beneath his ear the fall'n arrow stood,
 And from the wound appear'd the trickling blood. Dryden.

He lay stretch'd along, his eyes fix upward,
 And ever and anon a silent tear
 Stole down, and trickled from his hoary beard. Dryden.

The emblems of honour wrought on the face the brittle materials above-mentioned, tricked and under the first impressions of the heat. Ascham.

Imbrow'd with native browne, to Henry Ha-tuning his voice and balancing his hands,
 How fluent nonsense trickles from his tongue!
 How sweet the periods, whether said or sung! Pope.

They empty heads console with empty sound,
 No more, alas! the voice of fame they hear,
 The balm of dulcific trickling in their ear. Pope.

T. R. I.

TRICK, adj. [from trick.] Pretty. This is a word of endearment. Obsolete.

The fool hath planted in his memory
An array of good words; and I do know
A many fools that stand in better place,
Garnish'd like him, than for a trick'y word Defy the matter. Shakespeare.

All this service have I done since I went.
—My trick'y spirit! Shakespeare.

TRICORPUS, adj. [tricorpus, Latin.] Having three bodies.

TRIDE, adj. [among hunters; tride, Fr.] Short and ready. Bailey.

TRIDENT, n. f. [trident, Fr. tridens, Lat.] A three-forked sceptre of Neptune.

His nature is too noble for the world:
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident. Shakespeare.

Canst thou with fig's pierce him to the quick?
Or in his skull thy barbed trident stick? Sundys.

He lets them wear their taphire crowns,
And weld their little tridents. Milton.

Several find a mystery in every tooth of Neptune's trident. Addison.

TRIDENT, adj. Having three teeth.

TRIDING, n. f. [tridunga, Saxon; rather trithing.] The third part of a county or shire. This division is used only in Yorkshire, where it is corrupted into riding.

2. Happening every third day.

TRIENNIAL, adj. [triennus, Lat. triennal, French.]

1. Lasting three years.

I passed the bill for triennial parliaments
Richard the third, though he came in by blood, yet the short time of his triennial reign he was without any, and proved one of my best lawgivers. Howell.

2. Happening every third year.

TRIER, n. f. [from try.]

1. One who tries experimentally.

The ingenious triers of the German experiment found that their glass vessel was lighter when the air had been drawn out than before, by an ounce and very near a third. Boyle.

2. One who examines judicially.

Courts of justice are bound to take notice of acts of parliament, and whether they are truly pleaded or not, and therefore they are the triers of them. Hale.

There should be certain triers or examiners appointed by the state to inspect the genius of every particular boy. Spectator.

3. Tell; one who brings to the test.

You were used
To say, extremity was the trier of spirits;
That common chances common men could bear. Shakespeare.

TRIFALLOW, v. a. [tres, Latin, and pealge, Sax. a harrow.] To plow land

many we have beheld. Brown.

TRIFLE, v. n. [tryfelen, Dutch.]

1. To act or talk without weight or dignity; to act with levity; to talk with folly.

When they saw that we ought to abrogate such popish ceremonies as are unprofitable, or else might have other more profitable in their stead, they trifle and they bear the air about nothing which toucheth

T. R. I.

us, unless they mean that we ought to abrogate all popish ceremonies. Hooker.

2. To mock; to play the fool.

Do not believe,
That, from the fens of all civility,
I thus would play and trifle with your reverence. Shakespeare.

3. To indulge light amusement: as, he trifled all his time.

Whatever raises a levity of mind, a trifling spirit, renders the soul incapable of feeling, apprehending, and retaining the doctrines of piety. Law.

4. To be of no importance.

'Tis hard for every trifling debt of two shillings to be driven to law. Spenser.

TO TRIFLE, v. a. To make of no importance. Not in use.

Three score and ten I can remember well,
Within the volume of which time I've seen Hours dreadful and things strange; but this fore-night

Hath trifled former knowings. Shakespeare.

TRIFLE, n. f. [from the verb.] A thing of no moment.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deep consequence. Shakespeare.

Old Chaucer doth of Topas tell,
Mad Rahelais of Pantagruel,
A later third of Dowdabell,

With such poor trifles playing:
Others the like have labour'd at,
Some of this thing, and some of that,
And many of they know not what,

But that they must be saying. Dryden.

The infinitely greatest confuted good is neglected to satisfy the successive uneasiness of our desires pursuing trifles. Locke.

Brunetta's wife in actions great and rare,
But learns on trifles to bestow her care.

Thus every hour Brunetta is to blame,
Because the occasion is beneath her aim.

I think nought a trifle, though it small appear;
Small lands the mountain, moments make the year:
And trifles here. Your cure to trifles give,
Or you may die before you truly live. Young.

TRIFLER, n. f. [trifelaar, Dutch.] One who acts with levity; one that talks with folly.

A man cannot tell whether Apelles or Albert Durer were the more triflers, whereof the one would make a personage by geometrical proportions, the other by taking the best parts out of divers faces to make one excellent. Bacon.

Shall I, who can enchant the boldest deep,
Bid Boreas halt, make hills and forests move;
Shall I be baffled by this trifler, love? Granville.

As much as systematical learning is decried by some vain triflers of the age, it is the happiest way to furnish the mind with knowledge. Watts.

Triflers not even in trifles can excel;
'Tis solid bodies only polish well. Young.

TRIFLING, adj. [from trifle.] Wanting worth; unimportant; wanting weight.

To a soul supported with an assurance of the divine favour, the honours or afflictions of this life will be equally trifling and contemptible. Bogers.

TRIFLINGLY, adv. [from trifling.] Without weight; without dignity, without importance.

Those who are carried away with the spontaneous current of their own thoughts, do not never honour their minds in being thus triflingly busy. Locke.

TRIFOLIATE, adj. [tres and folium, Lat.]
Having three leaves.

Trifoliate cythus retrah'd its boughs
For humble sleep to crop, and goats to bronze. Harte.

TRIFORM, adj. [triformis, Latin.] Having a triple shape.

The moon her monthly round
Still ending, still renewing though and heav'n's
With borrow'd light her countenance triform
Hence fills, and empties, to enlighten the earth. Milton.

trigue, French; from intricare, Latin.]
See TRICKER.

1. A catch to hold the wheel on floor
ground.

2. The catch that being pulled looses the cock of the gun.

The pulling the trigger of the gun with which the murder is committed, has no natural connection with those ideas that make up the complex one, murder. Locke.

TRIGINTALS, n. f. [from triginta, Latin, thirty.]

Trentals or trigintals were a number of masses to the tale of thirty, instituted by St. Gregory.

TRIGLYPH, n. f. [In architecture.] A member of the frieze of the Dorick order, set directly over every pillar, and in certain spaces in the intercolumniations. Harris.

The Dorick order has now and then a fiber garnishment of lions' heads in the cornice, and of triglyphs and metopes always in the frieze. Watson.

TRI'GON, n. f. [trigōn.] A triangle. A term in astrology.

The ordinary height of a man ninety-six digits, the ancient Egyptians estimated to be equal to that musical cubit among them called palus fludis, or the trigon that the Egyptians at every step, consisting of three latera, each thirty-two digits. Hale.

TRI'GONAL, adj. [from trigon.] Triangular; having three corners.

TRILUMINOUS, } Latin.] Having three lights. Diet.

TRIM, adj. [gerjymme, Sax. completed.]

Nice; snug; dressed up. It is used with slight contempt.

T' one praise in cottage doth take,
Whom t' other trim bowers do make. Tuffer.

A trim exploit, a manly enterprise,
To conjure tears up in a poor maid's eyes
With your derision. Shakspeare.

The Dorick order has, in comparison of those that follow, a more masculine aspect, and little trimmer than the Tuscan that went before, save a saber garnishment now and then of lions' heads in the cornice, and of triglyphs and metopes always in the frieze. Wotton.

Dad thou not blush to live so like a beast,
So trim, so dissolute, so loosely dress'd. Dryden.
To TRIM. v. a. [trimman, Sax. to build.]

1. To fit out.

Melicious censurers ever,
As rav'nous fishes do a vessel follow
That is new trimm'd. Shakspeare.

2. To dress; to decorate.

Our youth got me to play the woman's part,
And I was trimm'd in Julia's gown. Shakspeare.
Pennyroyal and orpin they use in the country to trim their houses, binding it with a lath against a wall. Bacon.

Two arts attend architecture, like her principal gentlewomen, to dress and trim her, picture and sculpture. Wotton.

The victim ox that was for altars prest, Trimm'd with white ribbons and with garlands dress'd. Dryden.

3. To shave; to clip.

Mephiboseth had neither dress'd his feet, nor trimm'd his beard. 2 Samuel.
Clip and trim those tender strings like a beard.

I found her trimming up the diadem
On her dead mistress's. Shakspeare.

Go, sirrah, to my cell; as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely. Shakspeare.
Yet are the men more loose than they!

More kemb'd, and bath'd, and rubb'd, and trimm'd,
More sleek, more soft, and flacker limb'd. Ben J.
To blast the living gave the dead their due,
And wreaths herself had tainted, trimm'd anew.
Tickel.

When workmen fit a piece into other work, they say they trim in a piece. Mozon.

Each muse in Leo's golden days
Starts from her trance, and trims her wither'd brows.
Pope.

O'er globes, and sceptres, now, on thrones it swells,
Now, trims the midnight lamp in college cells.
Young.

5. To balance a vessel.

Sir Roger put his coachman to trim the boat.
Spectator.

6. It has often up emphatical.

He gave you all the duties of a man,
Trim'd up your praises with a princely tongue,
Spoke your deservings like a chronicle. Shakspeare.

To TRIM. v. n. To balance; to fluctuate between two parties.

If such by trimming and time-serving, which are but two words for the same thing, betray the church by manipulating her pious orders, this will produce confusion. South.

For men to pretend that their will obeys that law, while all besides their will serves the faction;
what is this but a gross, tawdry juggling with their duty, and a kind of trimming it between God and the devil. South.

He who would hear what ev'ry fool could say,
Wou'd never fix his thought, but trim his time away.
Dryden.

TRIM. n. f. Dress; geer; ornaments.

It is now a word of slight contempt.
They come like sacrifices in their trim,
And to the fire-eyed maid of smoky war,
All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them. Shakspeare.

Your labourious and dainty trims, wherein
You made great June angry. Shakspeare.

The goodly London in her gallant trim,
The Phoenix daughter of the vanquish'd old,
Like a rich bride does to the ocean swim.
And on her shadow rides in floating gold. Dryden.

TRIMLY. adv. [from trim.] Nicely;
neatly.

Her yellow golden hair
Was trimly woven, and in tresses wrought. Spenser.

The mother, if of the household of our lady, will have her son cunning and bold, in making him to live trimly. Ascham.

TRIMMER. n. f. [from trim.]

1. One who changes sides to balance parties;
a turncoat.

The same bat taken after by a weasel begged for mercy: No, says the weasel, no mercy to a mouse:
Well, says t'other, but you may see by my wings that I am a bird; and to the bat 'scap'd in both by playing the trimmer. L'Estrange.

To confound his hated coin,
All parties and religions join,
Whigs, trices, trimmers. Swift.

2. A piece of wood inserted.

Before they pin up the frame of ground-plates, they must fit in the summer and the girders, and all the joists and the trimmers for the stair-case.
Moxon.

TRIMMING. n. f. [from trim.] Ornamental appendages to a coat or gown.

Judgment without vivacity of imagination is too heavy, and like a dress without fancy; and the last without the first is too gay, and but all trimming.
Garth.

TRIMNESS. n. f. [from trim.] Neatness;
petty elegance of dress.

TRINAT. adj. [trinus, Lat.] Threefold.
Like many an angel's voice,
Singing before th' eternal majesty,
In their trinal triplicity on high. Spenser.

That far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherewith he wont at heav'n's high council table
To sit the midst of trinal unity,
He laid aside. Milton.

TRINE. n. f. [trine, Fr. trinus, Lat.] An aspect of planets placed in three angles of a trigon, in which they are supposed by astrologers to be eminently benign.

To th' other five,
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy. Milton.

Now frequent trines the happier lights among,
And high-ris'd Jove from his dark prison freed,
Those weights took off that on his planet hung,
Will gloriously the new-had works succeed. Dryden.

From Aries right-ways draw a line, to end
In the same round, and let that line subtend
An equal triangle; now since the lines Must three times touch the round, and meet three times.

Where'er they meet in angles those are trines.
Creesh.

To TRINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in a trine aspect.

This advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be outtridden, though outrun;
By fortune he was now to Venus trim'd,
And with Stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd. Dryden.

TRINITY. n. f. [trinitas, Lat. trinité, Fr.] The incomprehensible union of the Three Persons in the Godhead.

Touching the picture of the trinity, I hold it blasphemous and utterly unlawful. Pencham.

In my whole essay there is not any thing like an objection against the trinity. Locke.

TRINET. n. f. [This Skinner derives somewhat harshly from triquet, Fr. trinchetto, Ital. a topfall. I rather imagine it corrupted from tricket, some petty finery or decoration.]

2. Toys; ornaments of dress; superfluities of decoration.

Beauty and use can so well agree together, that of all the trinkets wherewith they are adorned, there is not one but serves to some necessary purpose. Sidney.

They throng who should buy first, as if my trinkets had been hallowed. Shakspeare.

Let her but have three wrinkles in her face,
Soon will you hear the saucy steward say,
Pack up with all your trinkets, and away. Dryden.

She was not hung about with toys and trinkets,
tweezer-cases, pocket-glasses. Arbuthnot.

How Johnny wheedled, threaten'd, fawn'd,
Till Phyllis all her trinkets pawn'd. Swift.

2. Things of no great value; tackle; tools.
What husbandlie-husbands, except they be foolish,
But handfom have storehouse for trinkets and tools? Tupper.

Go with all your servants and trinkets about you.
L'Estrange.

TRIOBOLAR. adj. [tribolaris, Lat.] Vile;
mean; worthless.

Turn your libel into verse, and then it may pass current amongst the ballad-mongers for a triobolar ballad. Chrysol.

To TRIP. v. a. [treper, French; trippen,
Dutch.]

1. To supplant; to throw by striking the feet from the ground by a sudden motion.

He conjunct
Tripp'd me behind. Shakspeare.

Be you contented,
To have a son set your decrees at naught,
To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person. Shakspeare.

2. To strike from under the body.
I tript up thy heels and beat thee. Shakspeare.

The words of Hobbes's defence trip up the heels of his cause; I had once resolved. To resolve pre-supposeth deliberation, but what deliberation can there be of that which is inevitably determined by causes without ourselves? Bramhall.

3. To catch; to detect.

These women
Can trip me, if I err; who, with wet cheeks,
Were present when she smil'd. Shakspeare.

To TRIP. v. n.

1. To fall by losing the hold of the feet.

2. To fail; to err; to be deficient.

Saint Jerome, who pardons not over-easily his adversaries, if any where they chance to trip, presents him as thereby making all sorts of men God's enemies. Hooker.

Virgil is so exact in every word, that none can be changed but for a worse: he pretends sometimes to trip, but it is to make you think him in danger when most secure. Dryden.

Many having used their utmost diligence to secure a retention of the things committed to the memory, cannot certainly know where it will trip and tail them. South.

Will shines in mixed company, making his real ignorance appear a seeming one: our club has caught him tripping, at which times they never spare him. Spectator.

Several writers of uncommon erudition would expose my ignorance, if they caught me tripping in a matter of so great moment. Spectator.

3. To stumble; to titubate.

I may have the idea of a man's drinking till his tongue trips, yet not know that it is called drunk-eness. Locke.

4. To run lightly.

In silence sad,
Trip we after the night's shade. Shakspeare.

The old saying is, the third pays for all; the tri-plex, sir, is a good tripping measure. Shakspeare.

He throws his arm, and with a long-drawn dash Blends all together; then distinctly trips
From this to that; then quick returning slips
And snatches this again, and pants there. Crahan.

TRI

On old Lysander, or Cypriote's head,
Trip no more in twilight ranks;
Though Erymanth your loss deplores,
A better seal shall give ye thanks.
She bounded by, and tripp'd to fight.
They had not time to take a steady fight.
Slay, nymph, he cried, I follow not a foe;
Thus from the lion trips the trembling doe.

Milton.

Well thou dost to hide from common sight
Thy chaste intrigues, too bad to bear the light:
Nor doubt I, but the silver-footed dame
Tripping from sea on such an errand came.
He'll make a pretty figure in a triumph,
And serve to trip before the victor's chariot.

Dryden.

The lower plaits of the drapery in antique figures in sculpture and painting, seem to have gathered the wind when the person is in a posture of tripping forward.

Addison.

In Britain's isles, as Heylin notes,
The ladies trip in petticoats.
They gave me instructions how to slide down,
and trip up the steepest slopes.

Prior.

Bye.

To take a short voyage.

TRIP, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke or catch by which the wrestler supplants his antagonist.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy calf?
Or wilt not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow?

Shakspeare.

He stript for wrestling, fencers his limbs with oil,
And watch'd with a trip his foe to foil.

Dryden.

It was a noble time when trips and Cornish hugs could make a man immortal.

Addison.

2. A stumble by which the foothold is lost.

3. A failure; a mistake.

He saw his way, but in too swift a pace,
To chafe the ground might be to lose the race:
They then, who of each trip th' advantage take,
Fad but those faults which they want wit to make.

Dryden.

Each seeming trip, and each digressive start,
Displays their case the more, and deep-plum'd art.

Harte.

4. A short voyage or journey.

I took a trip to London on the death of the queen.

Pope.

Latin.]

1. Threefold; consisting of three conjoined.

See in him
The triple pillar of the world transform'd into a trumpet's stool.

Shakspeare.

O night and shades,
How are ye join'd with hell in triple knot,
Against th' unarm'd weakness of one virgin,
Alone and helpless!

Milton.

TRI

Thrice happy pair! so near ally'd

In royal blood and virtue too:

Now love has you together ty'd,

May none this triple knot undo!

Waller.

By thy triple shape as thou art seen

In heav'n, earth, hell, grant this.

Dryden.

Strong Alcides, after he had slain

The triple Geryon, drove from conquer'd Spain

His captive herds.

Dryden.

Out bound the mastiff of the triple head;

Away the hare with double swiftness fled.

Swift.

2. Treble; three times repeated.

We have taken this as a moderate measure betwixt the highest and lowest; but if we had taken only a triple proportion, it would have been sufficient.

Barnet.

If then the atheist can have no imagination of more senses than five, why doth he suppose that a body is capable of more? If we had double or triple as many, there might be the same suspicion for a greater number without end.

Bentley.

To TRIPPLE, v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To treble; to make thrice as much, or as many.

To what purpose should words serve, when nature hath more to declare than groans and strong cries; more than streams of bloody sweat; more than his doubled and trippled prayers can express?

Hooker.

It these helpdience should gain admittance, in no long space of time his limited quantity would be tripled upon us.

Swift.

2. To make threefold.

Time, action, place, are so preserv'd by thee,
That e'en Cornelia's right with envy, too
Th' alliance of his tripp'd unity.

Dryden.

TRIPPLET, n. f. [from tripple.]

1. Three of a kind.

There sit C—nts, D—ks, and Harrison,
How they swagger, from their garrison;
Such a triplet could you tell

Swift.

Where to find on this side hell?

2. Three verses rhyming together: as,

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join

The varying verse, the full rebounding line,

The long ungluck march and energy divine.

Pope.

Some wretched lines from this neglected hand

May find my hero in the foreign land,

Warm with new fires, and pleas'd with new command.

Prior.

I frequently make use of tripple rhymes because they bound the sense, making the last verse of the triplet a pindaric.

Dryden.

TRIPPLICATE, adj. [from triplex, Latin.]

Made thrice as much.

Tripplicate ratio, in geometry, is the ratio of cubes to each other, which ought to be distinguished from triple.

Harris.

All the parts, in height, length, and breadth, bear a duplicate or tripplicate proportion one to another.

Cicero.

TRIPPLICATION, n. f. [from tripplicate.]

The act of trebling, or adding three together.

Since the margin of the visible horizon in the heavenly globe is parallel with that in the earthy, accounted but one hundred and twenty miles diameter; sense must needs measure the azimuths, or vertical circles, by triplication of the same diameter of one hundred and twenty.

Glazville.

TRIPPLICITY, n. f. [triplicité, Fr. from triplex, Latin.] Tribleness; state of being threefold.

It was a dangerous triplicity to a monarchy, to have the arms of a foreigner, the discontents of subjects, and the title of a pretender to meet.

Bacon.

Affect not duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts in your division of things.

Watts.

Two tripods cast in antick mould,

With two great talents of the sack'd gold.

Dryden.

TRI

TRIPOLY, n. f. [I suppose from the place whence it is brought.] A sharp cutting sand.

In polishing glass with putty, or tripoly, it is not to be imagined that those substances can by grating and fretting the glass bring all its least particles to an accurate polish.

Newton.

TRIPOS, n. f. A tripod. See TRIPOD.

Welcome all that lead or follow,

To the oracle of Apollo;

Here he speaks out of his pottle,

Or the tripod, his tower bottle.

Ben Jonson.

Cra'd fool, who would'st be thought an oracle,

Come down from off the tripod, and speak plain.

Dryden.

TRIPPER, n. f. [from trip.] One who trips.

TRIPPING, adj. [from trip.] Quick;
nimble.

The clear sun of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake, to tripping ebb; that stole
With soft foot towards the deep.

Milton.

TRIPPING, n. f. [from trip.] Light dance.

Back, shepherds, back, enough your play,
Here be without duck or nod,

Other trippings to be trod,

Of lighter toes.

Milton.

TRIPPINGLY, adv. [from tripping.] With agility; with swift motion.

This duty after me

Sing, and dance it trippingly.

Shakspeare.

Speak the speech trippingly on the tongue; but if you mouth it as many of our players do, I had as love the town-crier had spoke my lines.

Shakspeare.

TRIPTOLE, n. f. [triptoton, Latin.] A noun used but in three cases.

Clarke.

TRIPUDIARY, adj. [tripudium, Lat.] Performed by dancing.

Chaudus Pulcher underwent the like success when he continued the tripudary angulations.

Brown.

TRIPUDIATION, n. f. [tripudium, Latin.]

Act of dancing.

TRIREME, n. f. [triremis, Lat.] A galley

with three benches of oars on a side.

TRISECTION, n. f. [trises and sectio, Latin.]

Division into three equal parts: the tri-section of an angle is one of the deliderata of geometry.

TRISTEST, adj. [tristis, Latin.] Sad;

melancholy; gloomy; sorrowful. A bad

word.

Heavy's face dash glow

With tristful visage; and, as 'gainst the doom,

I thought sick at the act.

Shakspeare.

TRIVULX, n. f. [trivulcus, Lat.] A thing of three points.

Consider the threefold effect of Jupiter's trivulx, to burn, discale, and terebrate.

Brown.

TRISYLLABICAL, adj. [trissyllabe, French, from trissyllable.] Consisting of three syllables.

TRISYLLABLE, n. f. [trissyllaba, Latin.]

A word consisting of three syllables.

TRITE, adj. [tritus, Lat.] Worn out;

stale; common; not new.

These duties cannot but appear of infinite can-cern when we reflect how uncertain our time is,

this may be thought to trite and obvious a reflection, that none can want to be reminded of it.

Hogers.

She gives her tongue no moment's rest,

In phrases batter'd, stale, and trite,

Which modern ladies call polite.

Swift.

TRITENESS, n. f. [from trite.] Staleness;

commonness.

TRITHISM, n. f. [trithisme, Fr. τρις and ἴσος, Fr.] The opinion which holds three distinct gods.

TRI

TRI'RUABLE. adj. [triturable, Fr. from trituration.] Possible to be pounded or comminuted.

It is not only triturable and reducible to powder by contrition, but will not subsist in a violent fire.

TRITURATION. n. f. [trituration, French; trituro, Lat.] Reduction of any substances to powder upon a stone with a muller, as colours are ground: it is also called levigation.

He affirmeth, that a pumice stone-powdered is lighter than one entire; that abatement can hardly be avoided in trituration.

TRIVET. n. f. [See TREVER.] Any thing supported by three feet.

The best at horse-race he ordain'd a lady for his prize,

Generally praiseful; fair and young, and skill'd in housewiferies

Of all kind fitting; and withal a trivet, that enclos'd

Twenty-two measures.

The trivet table of a foot was lame;

A blot which prudent Baucis overcame;

Who thrush beneath the limping leg a herd.

TRIVIAL. adj. [trivial, French; trivialis, Latin.]

1. Vile; worthless; vulgar; such as may be picked up in the highway.

Be subjects great, and worth a poet's voice,

For men of sense despise a trivial choice.

2. Light; trifling; unimportant; inconsiderable. This use is more frequent, though less just.

This argues confidence in your grace,

But the respects thereof are nice and trivial,

All circumstances well considered.

This way of measuring felicity was so natural to him, that it would occur even in the most trivial instances.

See you mad fools, who, for some trivial right,

For love, or for mistaken honour, fight.

Were they only some slight and trivial indiscretions,

to which the example of the world exposed us,

it might perhaps not much concern our religion.

In every work regard the writer's end;

And if the means be just, the conduct true,

Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due.

The ancient poets are like many modern ladies;

let an action be never so trivial in itself,

they always make it appear of the utmost importance.

TRIVIALITY. adv. [from trivial.]

1. Commonly; vulgarly.

Money is not the sinews of war, as is trivially said,

where the sinews of men's arms, in effeminate people, fail.

2. Lightly; inconsiderably.

TRIVIALNESS. n. f. [from trivial.]

1. Commonness; vulgarity.

2. Lightness; unimportance.

TRUMP. n. f. [triumphus, Latin; trionphe, French.]

1. Pomp with which a victory is publicly celebrated.

Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave;

And there cut off thy most ungracious head,

Which I will bear in triumph to the king.

In ancient times the triumphs of the generals from victory, and the great donatives upon disbanded the armies, were things able to enslave all men's courage.

2. State of being victorious.

Sublime with expectation when to see in triumph issuing forth their glorious chief.

Hercules from Spain,

Arriv'd in triumph, from Geryon slain.

TRI

3. Victory; conquest.

Eros has

pack'd cards with Caesar, and false play'd my glory unto an enemy's triumph.

Each order bright

Sung triumph, and him sung victorious king.

If fools admire, or whining coxcombs tease,

The vain conquests the trifling triumphs boast.

4. Joy for success.

Great triumph and rejoicing was in heaven.

5. A conquering card, now called trump, See TRUMP.

TO TRIUMPH. v. n. [triumpho, Latin; trionpher, French.] This word is always accented in prose on the first syllable, but in poetry sometimes on the last.

1. To celebrate a victory with pomp; to rejoice for victory.

The triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment.

Your victory, alas! begets my fears;

Can you not then triumph without my tears?

2. To obtain victory.

This great commander fought many times to persuade Solymon to forbear to use his forces any farther against the christians, over whom he had sufficiently triumphed, and turn them upon the Peritians.

Then all this earthly grossness quit,

Attir'd with stars, we shall for ever sit,

Triumphing over death, and chance, and time.

There fix thy faith, and triumph o'er the world;

For who can help, or who can save besides?

While blooming youth and gay delight

Sit on thy rufy cheeks confest,

Thou hast, my dear, undoubted right

To triumph o'er this destin'd breath.

3. To insult upon an advantage gained.

How ill becoming is it in thy sex

To triumph, like an Amazonian trull!

Sorrow on all the pack of you,

That triumph thus upon my misery!

Our grand foe,

Who now triumphs, and in th' excess of joy

Sole reigning holds the tyranny of heaven.

TRIUMPHAL. adj. [triumphal, French; triumphalis, Lat. from triumph.] Used in celebrating victory.

He left only triumphal garments to the general.

Ye so near heav'n's door,

Triumphal with triumphal act have met.

Steel could the works of mortal pride confound,

And new triumphal arches to the ground.

Left we should for honour take

The drunken quarrel of a rake;

Or think it fented in a fear,

Or on a proud triumphal car.

TRIUMPHAL. n. f. [triumphalia, Latin;

triumphal ornaments.] A token of victory. Not in use.

He to his crew, that fat consulting, brought

Joyless triumphals of his hop'd success.

TRIUMPHANT. adj. [triumphans, Latin;

triumphant, French.]

1. Celebrating a victory.

Captives bound to a triumphal car.

It was drawn as a triumphal chariot, which at the same time both follows and triumphs.

2. Rejoicing as for victory.

Think you but that I know our state secure,

I would be so triumphant as I am?

Off with the traitor's head;

And now to London with triumphant march,

There to be crowned.

Successful beyond hope, to lead ye forth

Triumphant out of this infernal pit.

3. Victorious; graced with conquest.

As in the militant church men are excommuni-cate, not so much for their offence, as for their obstinacy; so shall it be in the church triumphant: the kingdom of heaven shall be barred against men; not so much for their sin committed, as for their lying therein without repentance.

He speedily through all the hierarchies

Intends to pass triumphant, and give laws.

Athena, war's triumphant maid,

The happy son will, as the father, aid.

TRIUMPHANTLY. adv. [from triumphant.]

1. In a triumphant manner in token of victory; joyfully as for victory.

Victory, with little loss doth play

Upon the dancing banners of the French;

Who are at hand triumphantly display'd.

Herself in person went to seek the sacred cross

Whereon our Saviour died; which found, as it was fought,

From Salem unto Rome triumphantly she brought.

Through armed ranks triumphantly she drives.

And with one glance commands ten thousand more.

2. Victoriously; with success.

Thou must, as a foreign recreant, be led

With manacles along our street: or else

Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,

And bear the pain.

3. With insolent exultation.

A mighty governing eye goes round the world, and his almost banished truth out of it; and a reigning triumphantly in its stead, is the source of a most of those confusions that plague the universe.

TRIUMPHER. n. f. [from triumph.] One who triumphs.

These words become your lips, as they pass through them,

And enter in our ears, like great triumphers

In their applauding gates.

August was dedicated to Augustus by the senate,

because in the same month he was the first time created consul, and thrice triumpher in Rome.

TRIUMVIRATE. n. f. [triumviratus, or

TRIUMVIRI. } triumviri, Latin] A coalition or concurrence of three men.

Lepidus of the triumvirate

Should be depos'd.

The triumviri, the three corner cap of lost

During that triumvirate of kings, Henry the eighth of England, Francis the first of France,

Charles the fifth emperor of Germany, none of three could win a palm of ground but the other two would balance it.

With these the Piercies then confederate,

And, as three heads, conjoin in one intent,

And, instituting a triumvirate,

Do part the land in triple government.

From distant regions fortune leads

An odd triumvirate of friends.

TRICENE. adj. [tres and unus, Lat.] As once three and one.

We read in scripture of a trine deity, of God made flesh in the womb of a virgin, and crucified

by the Jews.

TO TROAT. v. a. [with hunters.] To try

as a buck does at rutting time.

TROCAR. n. f. [trocar, corrupted from tro-

quart, French.] A chirurgical instrument.

The handle of the trocar is of wood, the car-

of silver, and the perforator of steel.

TROCHICAL. adj. [trochaïque, French;

trochæicus, Lat.] Consisting of troches.

TROCHANTERS. n. f. [τροχαντήρες.] Two processes of the thigh bone, called respectively major and minor, in which the tendons of many muscles terminate.

TROCHEE. n. f. [trocheus, Lat. trocheus

French; τροχαιος.] A foot used in Latin poetry, consisting of a long and short

syllable.

TROCHILICKS. n. f. [τροχίλικος, τροχίλιν, a wheel.] The science of rotatory motion.

There succeeded new inventions and horologies, composed of trochilicks, or the artifice of wheels, whereof some are kept in motion by weight, others without.

It is requisite that we rightly understand some principles in trochilicks, or the art of wheel instruments; as chiefly, the relation betwixt the parts of a wheel and those of a balance, the several proportions in the semidiameter of a wheel being answerable to the sides of a balance.

TROCHINGS. n. f. The branches on a deer's head.

TROCHISCH. n. f. [τροχίσκος; trochisque, French; trochiscus, Latin.] A kind of tablet or lozenge.

The trochisks of vipers, so much magnified, and the flesh of snakes some ways coadited and corrected.

TROD. } The part. pass. of tread.

TRODDEN. } Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the gentiles.

Thou, infernal serpent, shalt not long Rule in the clouds; like an autumnal star, Or lightning, thou shalt fall from heav'n trod down Under his feet.

Ev'n the rough rocks with tender myrtle bloom, And trodden weeds found out a rich perfume.

TRODE. The preterit of tread.

They trode the grapes, and made merry.

TRODE. n. f. [from trode, pret. of tread.] Footing.

The trode is not so tickle. They never set foot on that same trode. But baulke their right way, and strain abroad.

TROGLODYTE. n. f. [τρογλοδυτης.] One who inhabits caves of the earth.

Procure me a troglodyte footman, who can catch a toe at his full speed.

TO TROLL. v. a. [trollen, to roll, Dutch; perhaps from trochlea, Latin; a thing to turn round.] To move circularly; to drive about.

With the phant'ies of hey troll, Troil about the bridal bowl, And divide the broad-bread cake, Round about the bride's stake.

TO TROLL. v. n.

1. To roll; to run round. How pleasant, on the banks of Styx, To troll in a coach and six!

2. To fish for a pike with a rod which has a pulley toward the bottom, which I suppose gives occasion to the term.

Not dunn I ponds the golden carp to take, Nor trouble for pikes, dispeoplers of the lake.

TRO'LOP. n. f. [A low word, I know not whence derived.] A flatteringly loose woman.

TRO'LYDAMES. n. f. [Of this word I know not the meaning.]

A fellow I have known to go about with trollydames. I knew him once a servant of the prince.

TRO'NAGE. n. f. Money paid for weighing.

TROOP. n. f. [troupe, Fr. troppa, Italian; troupe, Dutch; trop, Swedish; troppa, low Latin.]

1. A company; a number of people collected together.

That which should accompany old age, As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends, I must not look to have.

Saw you not a blessed troop Invite me to a banquet, whose bright faces Cast thousand beams upon me like the sun?

As the mind, by putting together the repeated ideas of unity, makes the collective mode of any number, as a score, or a gross; so by putting together several particular substances, it makes collective ideas of substances, as a troop, an army.

2. A body of soldiers.

Æneas seeks his absent foe, And sends his slaughter'd troops to shades below.

3. A small body of cavalry.

To TROOP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To march in a body.

I do not, as an enemy to peace, Troop in the throngs of military men, But rather shew a while like fearful war.

They anon With hundreds, and with thousands, trooping came, Attended!

Armies at the call of trumpet

Troop to their standard.

2. To march in haste.

Yonder shines Aurora's harbinger, At whose approach ghosts, wand'ring here and there, Troop home to churchyards.

The dry streets flow'd with men, That troop'd up to the king's capacious court.

3. To march in company.

I do invest you jointly with my power, Preheminence, and all the large effects That troop with majesty.

TROOPER. n. f. [from troop.] A horse-fighter. A trooper fights only on horseback; a dragoon marches on horseback, but fights either as a horseman or footman.

Custom makes us think well of any thing: what can be more indecent than for any to wear boots but troopers and travellers? yet not many years since it was all the fashion.

TROPE. n. f. [τροπή; trope, Fr. tropus, Lat.] A change of a word from its original signification; as, the clouds forget rain, for forebode.

For rhetoric he could not ope His mouth, but out there flew a trope.

If this licence be included in a single word, it admits of tropes; if in a sentence, of figures.

TROPHIED. adj. [from trophy.] Adorned with trophies.

Some greedy minion, or imperious wife; The trophy'd arches, story'd halls invade, And haunt their slumbers in the pompous shade.

TROPHY. n. f. [trophæum, trophæum, Lat.] Something shown or treasured up in proof of victory.

What trophy then shall I most fit devise, In which I may record the memory Of my love's conquest, peerless beauty's prize Adorn'd with honour, love, and chastity?

To have borne His braided helmet and his bended sword Before him through the city, he forbids; Giving all trophy, signal, and ostent, Quite from himself to God.

There lie thy bones, Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb. Twice will I not review the morning's rite, Till I have torn that trophy from thy back, And split thy heart for wearing it.

In ancient times, the trophies erected upon the place of the victory, the triumphs of the generals upon their return, the great donatives upon the disbanding of the armies, were things able to inflame men's courage.

Around the poles hung helmets, darts, and spears, And captive chariots, axes, shields, and bars, And broken beaks of ships, the trophies of their wars.

The tomb with many arms and trophies grace, To shew posterity Elpeur was. Set up each senseless wretch for nature's beast, On whom praise shines, as trophies on a post.

TROPICAL. adj. [from trape.]

1. Rhetorically changed from the original meaning.

A strict and literal acceptance of a loose and tropical expression was a second ground. The words are tropical or figurative, and import an hyperbole, which is a way of expressing things beyond what really and naturally they are in themselves.

The foundation of all parables is, some analogy or similitude between the tropical or allusive part of the parable, and the thing intended by it.

2. [from tropic.] Placed near the tropic; belonging to the tropic.

The pine apple is one of the tropical fruits.

TROPICK. n. f. [tropique, Fr. tropicus, Lat.] The line at which the sun turns back, of which the north has the tropick of Cancer, and the south the tropick of Capricorn.

Under the tropick is our language spoke, And part of Flanders hath receiv'd our yoke.

Since on ev'ry sea, on ev'ry coast, Your men have been distress'd, your navy tost, Seven times the sun has either tropick view'd, The winter banish'd, and the spring renew'd.

TROPOLOGICAL. adj. [tropologique, Fr. τρόπος and λόγος.] Varied by tropes; changed from the original import of the words.

TROPOLOGY. n. f. [τρόπος and λόγος.] A rhetorical mode of speech including tropes, or a change of some word from the original meaning.

Not attaining the deuterology and second intention of words, they omit their superconsequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies, and are not perfected beyond their literalities.

TROUSERS. n. f. [trousses, Fr.] Breeches; hose. See TROUSE.

You rode like a kern of Ireland; your French hole off, and in your trait trousers.

TO TROT. v. n. [trotter, Fr. trotten, Dutch.]

1. To move with a high jolting pace.

Poor Tom, that hath made him proud of heart, To ride on a bay trotting horse, over four-miled bridges, to court his own shadow for a tractor.

Whom doth time trot withal?

—He trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a few months, time's pace is so hard, that it seems the length of several years.

Take a gentle trotting horse, and come up and see your old friends.

2. To walk fast; or, to travel on foot: in a ludicrous or contemptuous sense.

TROT. n. f. [trot, Fr. from the verb.]

1. The jolting high pace of a horse.

His honesty is not So loose or easy, that a rustling wind Can blow away, or glitt'ring look a blind: Who rides his sure and even trot, While the world now rides by, now lags behind.

Here lieth one who did most truly prove, That he could never die while he could move; So hung his destiny, never to rot While he might still jog on and keep his trot.

The virtuous saddle will amble when the world is upon the hardest trot.

TRO

2. An old woman, in contempt. I know not whence derived.

Give him gold enough, and marry him to an old trot with ne'er a tooth in her head: why, nothing comes amiss, for money comes withal. Shakespeare.
How now, bold-face! cries an old trot; tirrah, we eat out own hens, and what you eat you steal. L'Estrange.

TROT. n. f. [trouth, old English; тρεος, Saxon.]

1. Belief; faith; fidelity.

Saint Withold met the night-mare,
Bid her light and her troth plight. Shakespeare.
Stephen assails the realm, obtains the crown,
Such tumults raising as torment them both:
Th' afflicted state, divided in their troth
And partial faith, most miserable grows, Endures the while. Daniel.

2. Truth; verity.

In troth, thou'rt able to instruct gray hairs,
And teach the wily African deceit. Addison.

TROTHLESS. adj. [from troth.] Faithless; treacherous.

Thrall to the faithless waves and trothless sky. Fairfax.

TROTHPLIGHT. adj. [troth and plight.] Betrothed; affianced.

This, your son in law,
Is trothplight to your daughter. Shakespeare.

TROTTER. n. f. [from trot.]

1. One that walks a jolting pace.

2. A sheep's foot.

TO TROUBLE. v. n. [troubler, Fr.]

1. To disturb; to perplex.

An hour before the worshipp'd sun
Peer'd through the golden window of the east,
A troubled mind drew me to walk abroad. Shakespeare.
But think not here to trouble holy rest. Milton.
Never trouble yourself about those faults which age will cure. Locke.

2. To afflict; to grieve.

It would not trouble me to be slain for thee, but much it torments me to be slain by thee. Sidney.
They pertinaciously maintain, that afflictions are no real evils, and therefore a wise man ought not to be troubled at them. Tillotson.
Though it is in vain to be troubled for that which I cannot chuse, yet I cannot chuse but be afflicted. Tillotson.

3. To distress; to make uneasy.

He had credit enough with his master to provide for his own interest, and troubled not himself for that of others. Clarendon.
Do not dismay'd nor troubled at these tidings. Milton.

He was sore troubled in mind, and much distressed. Marcabees.

4. To busy; to engage overmuch.

Mumtha, thou art careful, and troubled about many things. Luke.

5. To give occasion of labour to. A word of civility or slight regard.

I will not trouble myself to prove that all terms are not definable, from that progress in infinitum which it will lead us into. Locke.

6. To tease; to vex.

The boy so troubles me;
'Tis past enduring. Shakespeare.

7. To disorder; to put into agitation or commotion.

A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled;
Muddy, ill favour'd, thick, bereft of beauty. Shakespeare.

An angel went down into the pool and troubled the water; whosoever first after the troubling stepped in was made whole. John.
God looking forth will trouble all his host. Milton.

Hear how the ear employs;
Their office is the troubled air to take. Davies.

Seas are troubled when they do revoke
Their flowing waves into themselves again. Dantes.

It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. South.

The best law in our days is that which continues our judges during their good behaviour, without leaving them to the mercy of such who might, by an undue influence, trouble and pervert the course of justice. Addison.

Thy force alone their fury can restrain,
And smooth the waves, or swell the troubled main. Dryden.

8. [In low language.] To sue for a debt.

TROUBLE. n. f. [trouble, Fr.]

1. Disturbance; perplexity.

They all his host derided, while they stood
A while in trouble. Milton.

2. Affliction; calamity.

Double, double, toil and trouble,
Fire burn, and cauldron bubble. Shakespeare.

3. Molestation; obstruction; inconvenience.

Take to thee from among the cherubim
The choice of flaming warriors, left the send Some new trouble raise. Milton.

4. Uneasiness; vexation.

I have dream'd
Of much offence and trouble, which my mind
Knew never till this irksome night. Milton.

TROUBLE-STATE. n. f. [trouble and state.] Disturber of a community; publick makebate.

Those fair baits these trouble-states still use,
Pretence of common good, the king's ill course,
Must be cast forth. Daniel.

TROUBLER. n. f. [from trouble.] Disturber; confounder.

Unhappy falls that hard necessity,
Quoth he, the troubler of my happy peace,
And vowed foe of my felicity. Spenser.
Heav'n's hurl down their indignation
On thee, thou troubler of the poor world's peace!

The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applause; the more depraved, subjection and tyranny; as is seen in great conquerors and troublers of the world, and more in arch-heretics. Bacon.

He knowing well that nation must decline,
Whole chief support and sinews are of cow,
Our nation's solid virtue did oppose

To the rich troublers of the world's repose. Waller.
The sword justly drawn by us can scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be pared, as to be under no apprehensions for the future. Atterbury.

TROUBLESOME. adj. [from trouble.]

1. Vexatious; uneasy; afflictive.

Heav'n knows
By what bye-paths and indirect crooked ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head:
To thee it shall descend with better quiet. Shakespeare.

He must be very wise that can forbear being troubled at things very troublesome. Tillotson.

2. Full of molestation.

Though our passage through this world be rough and troublesome, yet the trouble will be but short, and the rest and contentment at the end will be an ample recompence. Atterbury.

3. Burdensome; tiresome; wearisome.

My mother will never be troublesome to me. Pope.

4. Full of teasing business.

All this could not make us accuse her, though it made us almost pine away for sight, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney.

5. Slightly harassing.

They, and the putting off
These troublesome disguises which we wear. Milton.

Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bed-fellow? Shakespeare.

6. Unseasonably engaging; improperly importuning.

She of late is lightened of her womb,
That her to see should be but troublesome. Spenser.

TRO

7. Importunate; teasing.

Two or three troublesome old wives never let me have a quiet night's rest with knocking me up. Arbutnot.

TROUBLESOMELY. adv. [from troublesome.] Vexatiously; wearisomely; unseasonably; importunately.

Though men will not be so troublesomely critical as to correct others in the use of words, yet, where truth is concerned, it can be no fault to define their explication. Locke.

TROUBLESOMENESS. n. f. [from troublesome.]

1. Vexatiousness; uneasiness.

The lord treasurer complained of the troublesomeness of the place for that the exchequer was so empty; the chancellor answered, he of good cheer, for now you shall see the bottom of your business at the first. Evelyn.

2. Importunity; unseasonableness.

TROUBLOUS. adj. [from trouble.] Tumultuous; confused; disordered; put into commotion. An elegant word, but diffused.

He along would fly
Upon the streaming rivers, sport to find;
And oft would dare tempt the troublous wind. Spenser.

Soon as they this mock king did espie,
Their troublous suite they stinied by and by. Spenser.

No other noise, nor people's troublous cries,
As still are wont to annoy the walled town,
Might there be heard. Spenser.

As a tall ship tossed in troublous seas
Whom raging winds threaten to make the prey
Of the rough rocks. Spenser.

Then, masters, look to see a troublous world. Shakespeare.

Only one supply
In four years troublous and expensive reign. Daniel.

TROUVER. n. f. [trouver, French.] In the common law, is an action which a man hath against one that having found any of his goods refuseth to deliver them upon demand. Coxe.

TROUGH. n. f. [трос, трос, Sax. troch, Dutch; trou, Danish; trang, Icelandic; truogo, Italian.] Any thing hollowed and open longitudinally on the upper side.

The bloody boar
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes a trough
In your embowel'd bosoms. Shakespeare.

They had no ships but big troughs, which they call canoes.

Where there is a good quick fall of rain water, they have a half trough of stone, of a good length, three foot deep, with one end upon the high ground, the other upon the low; cover the trough with broad a good thick mat, and cast sand upon the top of the brakes, the lower end of the trough will run like a spring of water. Bacon.

Some log, perhaps, upon the water swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became.

And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Davies.
That also is accounted virgin quicksilver, which, having no need to pass the fire, is separated by water first in a sieve, and afterwards in a large trough. Pliny.

The water dissolves the particles of salt mixed in the stone, and is conveyed by long troughs in canals from the mines to Hall, where it is received in vast cisterns, and boiled off. Addison.

TO TROUL. v. n. [trollen, to roll, Dutch.]

See TROLL.

1. To move volubly.

Bred only, and completed, to the taste
Of lustful appetite; to sing, to dance,
To dress, and trowl the tongue, and roll the eye. Milton.

TRO

2. To utter volubly.

Let us be jocund. Will you trowl the catch
You taught me while ere? Shakespeare.

To TROUCE. v. a. [derived by Skinner from trone or tronson, Fr. a club.] To punish by an indictment or information.

More probable, and like to hold
Than land, or seal, or breaking gold;
For which to many, that renounc'd
Their plighted contracts, have been trownc'd.

If you talk of peaching, I'll peach first; I'll trownce you for offering to corrupt my honesty.

TROUSE. } n. f. [troussé, Fr. truijh, Erse.]
TROUSERS. } Breeches; hose. See TROUSERS.

The leather quilted jack serves under his shirt of mail, and to cover his trowse on horseback. Spenser.

The unfitness and pain in the leg may be helped by wearing a laced stocking; a laced trowse will do as much for the thigh. Wife of Man.

TROUR. n. f. [trubur, Sax. troda, trula, trutta, Lat.]

1. A delicate spotted fish, inhabiting brooks and quick streams.

The pond will keep trout and salmon in their seasonable plight, but not in their reddish grain.

Worse than the anarchy at sea,
Where fishes on each other prey;
Where every trout can make as high rants
Or his inferiors as our tyrants. Swift.

2. A familiar phrase for an honest, or perhaps for a silly fellow.

Here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling. Shakespeare.

To TROW. v. n. [trowian, Saxon; troc, Danish.]

1. To think; to imagine; to conceive.
A word now disused, and rarely used even in ancient writers but in familiar language.

What haughtiness, trow you, can be observed in that speech, which is made one knows not to whom? Sidney.

Is there any reasonable man, trow you, but will judge it meet that our ceremonies of christian religion should be popish, than Turkish or heathenish? Hooker.

To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow. Shaksp.
O rueful day! rueful indeed, I trow. Gay.

2. To believe,
Lend less than thou owest,
Lends more than thou trowest. Shakespeare.

TROW, interject. [for I trow, or trow you.]
An exclamation of inquiry.

Well, if you be not turn'd Turk, there is no more failing by the star.

—What means the fool, trow? Shakespeare.

TROWEL. n. f. [truelle, Fr. trulla, Lat.]

1. A trowel is a tool to take up the mortar with, and spread it on the bricks; with which also they cut the bricks to such lengths as they have occasion, and also stop the joints. Moxon.

This was dextrous at his trowel,
That was bred to kill a cow well. Swift.

2. It is used for any coarse instrument.

How shall I answer you?

—As wit and fortune will.

—Or as the destinies decree.

—Well said, that was laid on with a trowel.

Shakespeare.

The most accurate engravings or embossments seem such rude, bungling, deformed works, as if they had been done with a mattock, or a trowel.

Wilkins.

TROY-WEIGHT. } n. f. [from troies, Fr.]

TROY. } A kind of weight by which gold and bread are weighed, consisting of these denominations: a pound = 12 ounces; ounce = 20 pennyweights; pennyweight = 24 grains.

TRU

The English physicians make use of troy-weight after the following manner:

Grains	20	Scruple	60	3	Drachm	480	24	8	Ounce	5760	288	96	12	Pound
--------	----	---------	----	---	--------	-----	----	---	-------	------	-----	----	----	-------

The Romans left their ounce in Britain, now our averdupois ounce, for our troy ounce we had elsewhere. Arbutnot.

TRUANT. n. f. [truand, old Fr. treuwant, Dutch, a vagabond.] An idler; one who wanders idly about, neglecting his duty or employment. To play the truant is, in schools, to stay from school without leave.

For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truand been to chivalry. Shakespeare.

Though myself have been an idle truand,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time,
To clothe mine age with angel like perfection;
Yet hath Sir Protheus made fair advantage of his days. Shakespeare.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to our industry, that we might not live like idle borterers and truants. More.

Our ships are laden with the Trojan store,
And you like truants come too late ashore. Duden.

TRUANT. adj. Idle; wandering from business; lazy; loitering.

What keeps you from Wertemberg?

—A truand disposition, good my lord. Shakespeare.

He made a blushing cat of himself,

And elud his truand youth with such a grace,

As if he master'd there a double spirit,

Of teaching, and of learning instantly. Shakespeare.

Where thou feed'st a single sheep remain

In shades aloof, or couch'd upon the plain,

Or late to lag behind with truand pace,

Revenge the crime. Dryden.

To TRUANT. v. n. [truander, to beg about a country, French; trauanten, old German.] To idle at a distance from duty;
to loiter; to be lazy.

'Tis double wrong to truand with your bed,
And let her read it in thy looks at board. Shaksp.

TRUANTSHIP. n. f. [truallé, old French;
from truand; truandise in Chaucer is beggary.] Idleness; negligence; neglect of study or business.

The master should not chide with him if the child have done his diligence, and used no truand-ship. Ascham.

TRUSS. n. f. [tuber, Latin.] A fort of herb. Anstworth.

TRU'TAIL. n. f. A short squat woman.

Anstworth.

TRUCE. n. f. [truga, low Latin; tregua,
Italian; truce, old French.]

1. A temporary peace; a cessation of hostilities.

Leagues and truces made between superstitious persons, and such as serve God aright. Hooker.

They pray in vain to have sin pardoned, which seek not also to prevent sin by prayer, even every particular sin, by prayer against all sin, except men can name some transgression wherewith we ought to have truce. Hooker.

All this utter'd

With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bent,

Could not make truce with the unruly spleen

Of Tybalt, deaf to peace. Shakespeare.

This token serveth for a flag of truce

Between ourselves, and all our followers. Shaksp.

Men shall be lovers of their own selves, without natural affection, truce breakers. St Timothy.

Left the truce with treason should be mixt.

'Tis my concern to have the tree betwixt. Dryden.

Shadwell till death true dulness would maintain;
And in his father's right, and realm's defence, Ne'er would have peace with wit, nor truce with sense. Dryden.

2. Cessation; intermission; short quiet.

There he may find

Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain

The irksome hour. Milton.

Sickness, which in the latter years of his life

gave him but short and seldom truce. Fell.

TRUCIDATION. n. f. [from trucidó, Lat.]

The act of killing.

To TRUCK. v. n. [troquer, French; truccaré, Italian; trocar, Spanish; deduced by Salmastius from τρώγω, to get money.]
To traffick by exchange; to give one commodity for another.

To TRUCK. v. a. To give in exchange;
to exchange.

The Indians truck gold for glass. L'Estrange.

Go, miser! go; for lucra sell thy soul,

Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole;

That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,

See, what a vast estate he left his son! Dryden.

I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods, like the wild Indians, with each other.

Sayt.

TRUCK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Exchange; traffick by exchange.

It is no less requisite to maintain a truck in moral offices, than in the common business of commerce.

L'Estrange.

I love is covetous; I must have all of you; I heart for heart is an equal truck. Dryden.

2. [τρώγε.] Wooden wheels for carriage of cannon. Anstworth.

To TRUCKLE. v. n. [This word is, I believe, derived from truckled, which is always under another bed.] To be in a state of subjection or inferiority; to yield; to creep.

Shall our nation be in bondage thus

Unto a hand that truckles under us? Chenier d.

For which to many a legal cuckold

Has been run down in courts, and truckled.

Hudibras.

Men may be stiff and obstinate upon a wrong ground, and ply and truckle too upon as false a foundation. 17th century.

Religion itself is forced to truckle to worldly policy. North.

His zeal was not to lash our crimes,

But discontent against the times;

For had we made him truly ours,

To raise his post or fill his coils,

Perhaps he might have truckled down,

Like other brethren of his gown. Swift.

They were subdued and ruled by Alexander's captains, and continued under several revolutions

a small truckling state, of no name till they fell under the Romans. Swift.

TRUCKLEBED, or Trundlebed. n. f. [properly truckled; from truckle, Latin, or τρώγε.] A bed that runs on wheels

under a higher bed.

There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing bed and truckled. Shakespeare.

If he that is in battle slum

Be in the bed of honour lain;

He that is beaten may be laid

To lie in honour's truckled. Hudibras.

TRUCULENCE. n. f. [truculentia, Latin.]

1. Savageness of manners.

2. Terribleness of aspect.

TRUCULENT. adj. [truculentus, Latin.]

1. Savage; barbarous.

A barbarous Scythia, where the savage and truculent inhabitants transfer themselves from place to place in waggons, as they can find pasture, and live upon milk, and flesh roasted in the sun on the panels of their saddles. Ray.

TRU

2. Terrible of aspect.
3. Destructive; cruel.
Pestilential feminaries, according to their grossness of subtilty, cause more or less truculent plagues, some of such malignity, that they evacuate in two hours. Harvey.
TO TRUDGE. v. n. [truggolare, Italian.]
To travel laboriously; to jog on; to march heavily on.
No man is secure, but night-walking heralds,
That trudge between the king and mistress Shore. Shakespeare.
No sooner was he fit to trudge,
But both made ready to dislodge. Hudibras.
Away they trudged together, and about midnight got to their journey's end. L'Estrange.
Once a poor rogue, 'tis true, I trod the street,
And trudged to Rome upon my naked feet:
Gold is the greatest god. Dryden.
He that will know the truth must leave the beaten track, which none but servile minds trudge continually in. Locke.
TRUE. adj. [treopa, trupa, Saxon.]
1. Not false; not erroneous; agreeing with fact, or with the nature of things.
Of those he chose the falsest two,
And stilted for to forge true seeming lies. Spenser.
Teeth hadst thou in thy head when thou wast born;
And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
Thou canst not into the world with thy legs forward. Shakespeare.
Mesmerian fables true,
If true, here only. Milton.
What you said had not been true,
If spoke by any else but you. Cowley.
2. Not false; agreeing with our own thoughts.
-3. Pure from the crime of falsehood; veracious.
A true witness delivereth souls. Proverbs.
4. Genuine; real; not counterfeit.
The darkness is past, and the true light now shines. John.
Among unequals what society
Can sort? What harmony or true delight? Milton.
Unbend the charms that in slight fables lie,
And teach that truth is truest poetry. Cowley.
Religion, as it is the most valuable thing in the world, so it gives the truest value to them who promote the practice of it by their example and authority. Atterbury.
5. Faithful; not perfidious; steady.
My revenge is now at Milford, would I had wings to follow it! come and be true. Shakespeare.
So young, and so untender?
—So young, my lord, and true.
—Let it be so; thy truth then be thy dower. Shakespeare.
Do not see
My fair rose wither; yet look up; behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true love tears. Shakespeare.
I'll rather die
Deserted, than oblige thee with a fact Perficious to thy peace, chiefly assur'd
Remarkably so late of thy true,
So faithful, love unequal'd. Milton.
The first great work
Is, that yourself may to yourself be true. Roscom.
When this fire is kindled, both sides inflame it;
all regard of merit is lost in persons employed, and these only choose that are true to the party. Temple.
Smil'd Venus, to behold her own true knight Obtain the conquest, though he lost the fight. Dryden.
True to the king her principles are found;
Oh! that her practice were but half so found!
Stedfast in various turns of state the stood,
And seal'd her vow'd affection with her blood. Dryden.
The true hearts for Voiture heav'd with sighs;
Voiture was wept by all the bright eyes. Pope.
True to his charge, the bard preserv'd her long
In honour's limits; such the power of song. Pope.
6. Honest; not fraudulent.

TRU

- The thieves have bound the true men: now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be arguable for a week. Shakspeare.
If king Edward be as true and just,
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mow'd up. Shakspeare.
7. Exact; conformable to a rule.
If all those great painters, who have left us such fair platitudes, had rigorously observed it, they had made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden.
He drew
A circle regularly true. Prior.
Tickel's first book does not want its merit; but I was disappointed in my expectation of a translation nicely true to the original; whereas in those parts where the greatest exactness seems to be demanded, he has been the least careful. Arbutnot.
8. Rightful.
They seize the sceptre;
Then lose it to a stranger, that the true
Anointed King Messiah might be born
TRUEBORN. adj. [true and born.] Having a right by birth to any title.
Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a trueborn Englishman. Shakspeare.
Let him that is a trueborn gentleman,
And stands upon the honour of his birth,
From off this briar pluck a white rose with me. Shakspeare.
TRUEBRE'D. adj. [true and bred.] Of a right breed.
Two of them I know to be as truebred cowards
as ever turned back. Shakspeare.
Bauble do you call him? he's a substantial truebred beast, bravely forhaunched. Dryden.
TRUEHEARTED. adj. [true and heart.]
Honest; faithful.
I have known no honest or truehearted man:
fare thee well. Shakspeare.
TRUELOVE. n. s. An herb.
TRUELOVEKNOT. n. s. [true, love, and TRUELOVEKNOT.] knol. Limes drawn through each other with many involutions, considered as the emblem of interwoven affection.
I'll carve your name on barks of trees
With true love knots, and flourishies,
That shall insure eternal spring. Hudibras.
TRUENESS. n. s. [from true.] Sincerity; faithfulness.
The even carriage between two factions proceedeth not always of moderation, but of a true ness to a man's self, with end to make use of both. Bacon.
TRUEPENNY. n. s. [true and penny.] A familiar phrase for an honest fellow.
Say it thou for art thou there, truepenny?
Come on. Shakspeare.
TRUEFFLE. n. s. [truffe, truffe, French.]
In Italy, the usual method for the finding of truffes, or subterraneous mushrooms, called by the Italians tartufali, and in Latin tubera terra, is by tying a cord to the hind leg of a pig, and driving him, observing where he begins to root. Ray.
TRUG. n. s. A hod for mortar.
TRULL. n. s. [trulla, Italian.]
1. A low whore; a vagrant trumpeter.
I'm sure I fear'd the dauphin and his trull. Shakspeare.
A trull who fits
By the town wall, and for her living knits. Dryden.
So Mævius, when he drum'd his skull,
To celebrate some suburb trull;
His similes in order set,
And every crambo he cou'd get;
Before he could his poem close,
The lovely nymph had lost her nose. Swift.
2. It seems to have had first at least a neutral sense: a girl; a lass; a wench.
Among the rest of all the route,
A passing proper lass,
A white-haired trull, of twenty years,
Or more about there was:

TRU

- In stature passing all the rest,
A gallant girl for bewee;
To be compar'd with townish nymphs,
So fair she was to view. Turberville.
TRULY. adv. [from true.]
1. According to truth; not falsely; faithfully; honestly.
They thought they might do it, not only truthfully, because they loved him; and truly, because such indeed was the mind of the people; but safely, because she who ruled the king was agreed thereto.
No untruth can avail the patron long; for the most truly are most behovefully spoken. Hooker.
2. Really; without fallacy.
Wisdom alone is truly fair. Milton.
Such as are efficaciously called, justified, and sanctified, while they live, are truly holy, and when they die, are perfectly holy. Peckham.
3. Exactly; justly.
Right reason is nothing else but the mind of man judging of things truly, and as they are in themselves. Locke.
4. Indeed: a slight affirmation, almost expletive.
I have not undertaken it out of any vain pleasure in mine own pen; nor truly without powd'ring with myself beforehand what censur I might incur. Butt.
TRUMP. n. s. [trompe, Dutch, and trumba, Italian.]
1. A trumpet; an instrument of warlike music.
Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field. Shakspeare.
Yet first to those ychain'd in sleep,
The wakeful trump of doom must thunder through the deep. Milton.
I heard
The neighing couriers and the soldiers cry,
And sounding trumpets that seem'd to tear the air. Dryden.
Beneath this tomb an infant lies,
To earth whose body lent,
Hereafter shall more glorious rise,
But not more innocent.
When the archangel's trump shall blow,
And souls to bodies join,
What crowds shall with their lives below
Had been as short as thine! Butt.
2. [corrupted from triumph. Latins.] A Christmas sermon, exhibited a game at cards, and made the ace of hearts trump. For. A winning card; a card that has particular privileges in a game. Him Bafo follow'd, but his fate more hard, Gain'd but one trump and one plebeian card. Pope.
Now her heart with pleasure jumps,
She scarce remembers what is trump. Butt.
3. To put to or upon the TRUMPS. To put to the last expedient.
We are now put upon our last trump; the fort is earthen, but I shall send my two turners in about him. Dryden.
TO TRUMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

2. To TRUMP up. [from tromper, French; to cheat.] To devise; to forge.
TRUMPERY. n. s. [tromperie, French, a cheat.]
1. Something fallaciously splendid; something of less value than it seems.
The trumpery in my house brings hither,
For state to catch these thieves. Shakspeare.
2. Falsehood; empty talk.
Breaking into parts the story of the creation, and delivering it over in a mystical sense, wrapping up mixed with other their own trumpety, they have sought to obscure the truth thereof. Haile.
3. Something of no value; trifles.
Embrios and idiots, eremits and fairs,
White, black, and grey, with all their trumpety. Milton.

Another cavity of the head, was stuffed with billet-doux, pricked dances, and other trumpery of the same nature. Addison.

TRUMPET. n. f. [trompette, French and Dutch.]

1. An instrument of martial musick sounded by the breath.

What's the business,
That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? Shakespeare.

If any man of quality will maintain upon Edmund earl of Gloster, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear by the third sound of the trumpet. Shakespeare.

As dispers'd souldiers, at the trumpet's call,
Haste to their colours all. Cowley.

He blew
His trumpet, heard in Ork, since perhaps
When God defended, and perhaps once more
To sound at gen'ral doom. The angelick blast Filled all the regions. Milton.

The last loud trumpet's wondrous sound
Shall through the rending tombs rebound,
And wake the nations under ground. Holmes.

Things of deep sense we may in prose unfold,
But they move more in lofty numbers told;
By the loud trumpet which our courage aids,
We learn that found, as well as sense, persuades. Wallace.

The trumpet's loud clangor
Excites us to arms,

With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden.

Every man is the maker of his own fortune, and must be in some measure the trumpet of his fame. Tatler.

Let the loud trumpet found,
Till the roofs all around
The shrill echoes rebound. Pope.

2. In military style, a trumpeter.
He wisely desired, that a trumpet might be first sent for a pair. Clarendon.

Among our forefathers, the enemy, when there was a king in the field, demanded by a trumpet in what part he resided, that they might avoid firing upon the royal pavilion. Addison.

3. One who celebrates; one who praises.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him return in envy. Bacon.

That great politician was pleased to have the greatest wit of those times in his interests, and to be the trumpet of his praises. Dryden.

TO TRUMPET. v. a. [trompeter, French;
from the noun.] To publish by sound of trumpet; to proclaim.

That I did love the Moor to live with him,
My downright violence to form my fortunes
May trumpet to the world. Shakespeare.

Why so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings! Shakespeare.

They went with sound of trumpet; for they did nothing but publish and trumpet all the reproaches they could devise against the Irish. Bacon.

TRUMPETER. n. f. [from trumpet.]

1. One who sounds a trumpet.

Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines. Shak.
As they returned, a herald and trumpeter from the Scots overtook them. Hayward.

Their men lie securely intrench'd in a cloud,
And a trumpet hornet to battle sounds loud. Dryden.

An army of trumpeters would give as great a strength as this confederacy of tongue warriors, who, like those military musicians, content themselves with animating their friends to battle. Addison.

2. One who proclaims, publishes, or denounces.

Where there is an opinion to be credited of virtue or greatness, these men are good trumpeters. Bacon.
How came so many thousands to fight, and die in the same rebellion? why were they deceived into it by those spiritual trumpeters, who followed them with continual alarms of damnation if they did not venture life, fortune, and all, in that which those impostors called the cause of God? South.

3. [scolopex.] A fish. Ainsworth.

TRUMPET-FLOWER. n. f. [bignonia.] A tubulous flower. Miller.

TRUMPET-TONGUED. adj. [trumpet and act of lopping or maiming.

TRUNCHEON. n. f. [tronçon, French.]

1. A short staff; a club; a cudgel.

With his truncheon he so rudely stroke
Cymbles twice, that twice him forc'd his foot revoke. Spenser.

Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;
Thy hand is but a finger to my fist;
Thy leg is a stick compared with this truncheon. Shakespeare.

The English flew divers of them with plumets off head tied to a truncheon or staff by a cord. Hayward.

One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryden.

2. A staff of command.

The hand of Mars
Beckon'd with fiery truncheon my retire. Shakespeare.

No ceremony that to great ones 'longs,
The martial's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one half so good a grace,
As mercy does. Shakespeare.

TO TRUNCHEON. v. a. [from the noun.]
To beat with a truncheon.

Captain! thou abominable cheater! If captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out of taking their names upon you before you earned them. Shakespeare.

TRUNCHEONER. n. f. [from truncheon.]
One armed with a truncheon.

I met the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried out, Chubs! when I might see from far some tory truncheoners draw to her succour. Shakespeare.

TO TRUNDLE. v. n. [trondeler, Picard French; trénbl, a boul, Saxon.] To roll; to bowl along.

In the four last it is heaved up by several spon-ders intermixed with proper breathing places, and I

He was
The ivy, which had hid my princely trunk,
And suckt my verdure out on't. Shakespeare.

About the mossy trunk I wound me soon,
For high from ground the branch's would require Thy utmost reach. Milton.

Creeping 'twixt 'em all, the manning vine
Does round their trunks her purple clusters twine. Dryden.

Some of the largest trees have seeds no bigger than some diminutive plants, and yet every seed is a perfect plant, with a true trunk, branches, and leaves, inclosed in a shell. Bentley.

2. The body without the limbs of an animal.
